Low-Wage Workers

With the rapid development of the whole society, industrial production has also gradually increased with the continuous reform of the market; it has become a market economy pursuing free trade. Indeed, because of the transforms in the economic system, laborers from the working class are the most squeezed and the most overworked; they do not have enough money to survive. Many factory workers or service workers in the service industry, have to work a lot of hours a day or have to work many part-time jobs each day to cover their necessary expenses.

I like the use of the semicolon but space out your usage

Low-wage workers are mostly unable to resist because they struggle to find new jobs or are quickly replaced by new workers. Is there any way to help these workers who suffer from low wages?

Fortunately, I was born in the millennium of 2000, which also enabled me to see the rapid progress of science and technology. When I was in kindergarten, there were many handicrafts, such as hand-knitted dolls, but with the development of science and technology, higher technology production machines were invented. As a result of the invention of machines, production increased, but the amount of knowledge and demand for workers decreased. The factories that the capitalists had set up needed to produce large quantities of goods and maximize their profits. Therefore, the division of labor method mentioned by Adam Smith is used to improve the production. Each worker is responsible for only one production part of a product, and then the final
