

Marissa Zucca

Sunday

Hello Everyone,

My strongest professional strengths are that I'm a self-motivated team player that strives to be successful in my career. I've always proven to my leadership that I'm a dependable trustworthy employee with a flexible schedule. I try my best to have a positive outlook on every situation that is presented to me and I communicate effectively with coworkers and leadership. My strengths are important because they help me personally know that I put my all into my career. Not only that, I believe that my professional strengths are ones that many employers find important.

One thing that I think really helps on marketing myself is networking. I've met some important people in the industry I'm focused in, and many of them are waiting for me to finish my degree. The way that they will know this without me reaching out to them specially is through LinkedIn. I make it a point to keep my profile up to date because you never know when an opportunity may approach.

← Reply

Shyea Wallace

Monday

Professor/Class,

A few professional strengths

- Self motivated
- Team player
- Reliable
- Hard-working

These strengths are important when you are working for someone. I would market myself by letting them know that I arrive early to work to get things in order before the day starts. Having things in order puts room for more tasks to complete. Whenever there's work that needs to done I'm always available. I will also indicate that I'm a team player, which is an important factor.

← Reply 