Dissecting a Moral Issue: Pick an ethical or moral issue that interests you. It could be anything (from social media and internet privacy to minimum wage, to physician-assisted euthanasia). Define the problem(s) or challenges associated with your issue. Next, describe several competing perspectives and possible solutions or compromises that others have presented regarding your issue. Use facts, data, and other arguments to describe these various points of view. In your opinion, what criteria should be used in evaluating these various positions? In other words, how should we go about assessing which perspective(s) are more reasonable or useful than others? Do you have a favored position? Why or why not?
