Compared with other alternatives such as Zolpidem 10 mg and Hydroxyzine 50 mg at bedtime, the drug has fewer side effects on patients and leads to faster results. Trazodone's administration happens orally once a day, making it favorable for patients that are poor in following medication prescription. ¹ I chose to continue with the pill since the medicine already indicated positive progress with noteworthy patient improvement. However, half of the drug's dosage was split when the patient complained of next-day drowsiness. In response to the unwanted prolonged penis erection due to the medication, I explained to the patient that it was a common side effect of the drug, which would diminish over time. The reason for taking this choice was that it was advisable to manage the patient's priapism before deciding to switch to another drug, mainly because the medicine already showed sustained efficacy.

¹ Ethical issues were of crucial consideration in handling the patient. The patient received information about his condition and the treatment measures, including their possible side effects. Again, there was no sharing of information about the pa-
