I feel that some blame does lay on Hoover, primarily for being a president who didn't necessarily "rock the boat" too much. The Great Depression was a worldwide economic collapse, and I feel personally that it's too much blame to lay on one person. The stock market had worked for years prior to the collapse. Perhaps if he did more to provide direct relief and take more of a hands-on approach thing could have been different. Regardless, the Great Depression happens with or without Hoover.
