

You are on the right track and headed in the right direction. You need to nail down your arguments and thesis for the essay. It seems like what you are trying to do is to expose the differences in wealth and poverty over time throughout history. And that is fine. Your thesis can be that there have been sharp differences between those who have wealth and those in poverty.

So you would start out with Adam Smith and laissez-faire.. How the government was on the side of big industrialists and no regulation. People challenged that like in the Pullman Strike.

Do you see how you need to structure this?

Try another draft-- I know you can do it!

I put some comments on the attached draft. Be sure to turn on Track Changes under Review in Word so you can see the Comment Bubbles on the right hand side of the page.

Let me know what you think.....

MJB

You can trace this over time beginning in the 1860s'.....

Build this idea around the examples that you have-- they are good.....keep that question in mind. How am I going to show the disparity between the haves and have nots in any time period?

Use

Comments- Tareale

Final.docx

Doc

me 12:51 PM

to Martha

