

Sally: Separated but on friendly basis if I may add.

Johnson: What transpired? Obviously God is unaccountable.

Sally: (On track?)

Johnson: Was it an incident?

Sally: No incident. A tight fist rather. That and bossiness.

Johnson (smiling): So you don't like bosses but you like to spend

Sally: Only if they can pay well. - unclear

Johnson: mmmh! May be you didn't love him.

Sally: No, perhaps I didn't... or... not enough anyway, I admit it.

Johnson: It happens, but there are more fish. You got a Kid like me?

Sally: Not really, thankful. Just little me (rolling down on the make) - ?

Johnson: (Motions the bartender over who takes her glass and goes to prepare another drink). So what do you do? > is this set in another year? or are we in a bar? I'm not Sally: You first. Accounting?

Johnson: (A far off) clear what you meant by "university club"

Sally: Economics or finance option. Am I closer?

Johnson: Yes, It does start with an "E" but not Economics

Sally: I know now. But what's that?

Johnson: (Laughs leaning back on the wall) OK. I'll tell you. Engineering, Civil to be precise.

Sally: Hey, that's great. I am in real estate. This blend well.

Johnson: oh my, what an evening company) So, I'm talking to an expert here.

Questions for you:

When are we? Is J+S's speech realistic for college students? Are their circumstances so common as to be easily guessed? (Where is this set?)

What is the conflict here? What's going to → very formal