2.  Who benefits from the importation of tomatoes grown in Mexico? Who suffers?  Give arguments in support of your answer. Those who benefited from tomatoes importation grown in Mexico were the American business and trade groups producing tomatoes in Mexico and then import them to the united states to sell that at a higher price. Others who benefited were raw materials suppliers such as agricultural pieces of equipment and seeds. Those who suffered were mainly Florida tomato producers.

 This was brought up by the fact of less competitive output in price and quality than Mexico's. This did hurt Florida grower's business because Mexico tomato import reduced Florida grown tomatoes demand.

3.  Do you think that Mexican producers were dumping tomatoes in the United States? Give reasons. According to my view, Mexican producers are not dumping anything to the United States.  What they
