

My Website is Legit!

Title: _____

URL: _____

✓	CRITERIA	HOW DOES YOUR SOURCE MEET THIS CRITERIA?
	This source is one of the following: • .gov and .mil (government run sites) • .edu (an education site) • OR a trusted and known .com/.org/.co site
	This site looks professional • This site is professional, clean, and organized.
	The author is stated • You should use sites that have a stated author. Sometimes the author's name will be on the article or page, and sometimes you will have to dig a little deeper to an "about the author" page or a link on the main site.
	The site contains no typos or errors • Grammar, spelling, and other errors are a hint that the information has not been reviewed carefully and may be suspect.
	There are citations or a bibliography • These will help you determine the legitimacy of secondary sources. Ask yourself if the bibliography shows quality research material.
	There is a date for the publication/revision of the page • You will need this information to cite properly. It is also important to know that your information is current.
	The information seem in depth and comprehensive? • You want to look for sources dedicated to the information you are looking for, not a source, which briefly touches on your topic.
