EDWARD HOPPER'S NIGHTHAWKS, 1942

The three men are fully clothed, long sleeves, even hats, though it's indoors, and brightly lit, and there's a woman. The woman is wearing a short-sleeved red dress cut to expose her arms, a curve of her creamy chest; she's contemplating a cigarette in her right hand, thinking that her companion has finally left his wife but can she trust him? Her heavy-lidded eyes, pouty lipsticked mouth, she has the redhead's true pallor like skim milk, damned good-looking and she guesses she knows it but what exactly has it gotten her so far, and where?—he'll start to feel guilty in a few days, she knows the signs, an actual smell, sweaty, rancid, like dirty socks; he'll slip away to make telephone calls and she swears she isn't going to go through that again, isn't going to break down crying or begging nor is she going to scream at him, she's finished with all that. And he's silent beside her, not the kind to talk much but he's thinking thank God he made the right move at last, he's a little dazed like a man in a dream—is this a dream?—so much that's wide, still, mute, horizontal, and the counterman in white, stooped as he is and unmoving, and the man on the other stool unmoving except to sip his coffee; but he's feeling pretty good, it's primarily relief, this time he's sure as hell going to make it work, he owes it to her and to himself, Christ's sake. And she's thinking the light in this place is too bright, probably not very flattering, she hates it when her lipstick wears off and her makeup gets caked, she'd like to use a ladies' room but there isn't one here and Jesus how long before a gas station opens?—it's the middle of the night and she has a feeling time is never going to budge. This time though she isn't going to demean herself— he starts in about his wife, his kids, how he let them down, they trusted him and he let them down, she'll slam out of the goddamned room and if he calls her Sugar or Baby in that voice, running his hands over her like he has the right, she'll slap his face hard, You know I hate that: Stop! And he'll stop. He'd better. The angrier she gets the stiller she is, hasn't said a word for the past ten minutes, not a strand of her hair stirs, and it smells a little like ashes or like the henna she uses to brighten it, but the smell is faint or anyway, crazy for her like he is, he doesn't notice, or mind— burying his hot face in her neck, between her cool breasts, or her legs—wherever she'll have him, and whenever. She's still contemplating the cigarette burning in her hand, the counterman is still stooped gaping at her, and he doesn't mind that, why not,

as long as she doesn't look back, in fact he's thinking he's the luckiest man in the world so why isn't he happier?

THE MOUNTAIN LION

The mountain lion with jewels for eyes entered, panting,
my sleep,
as if it were his own.

His saliva was sweet as honey,
flooding my mouth.

The mountain lion filled me like a hand slowly forced into a glove—
tight, tight.
Now the jewel eyes are locked to my own.

I first saw the mountain lion in the Sierra Nevadas, dun-colored, heavy switching tail, tawny eyes.
Idly trotting in the sun.
Asleep for centuries on sun-baked rock.
His breath hot and fetid,
smelling of blood.

The mountain lion's soul is transparent
as spring water.
If it exists.

In my dreaming head the mountain lion paced.
His wisdom was sudden as bones being crunched.
