foundation upon which freedom and happiness would be preserved.

While the order of formal education in the world has inclined more on helping people become employable and make a living out of working in a formal sector, education is supposed to produce thinkers who can live their lives independent of others. Bubbly calls formal employment slavery and refers to the freedom to do what one wants when they want and how they like to do it a luxury in our time. However, both Bubbly and Cuban agree that people should be free to choose what they want to do and do it their way.
