

General Requirements:

Topic: The topic related to pathophysiology that course will be provide by the instructor.

Length: Presentations should be 20 to 30 minutes long

Delivery: Ensure you speak clearly, concisely, and within the time limit.

Visuals: Use high-quality images, diagrams, and charts to illustrate your points and make your presentation more engaging.

Citations: Properly cite all sources of information used in your presentation.

Content Requirements:

Introduction: Briefly introduce yourself, the topic of your presentation, and its relevance to pathophysiology.

Normal physiology: Briefly review the normal anatomy and function of the organ system or process relevant to your chosen topic.

Pathophysiology: Explain the disease or condition in detail, including its etiology, pathogenesis, signs and symptoms, and diagnostic tests.

Clinical manifestations: Discuss the clinical manifestations of the disease or condition, including how it affects different body systems.

Treatment and management: Discuss the treatment options and management strategies for the disease or condition.

Conclusion: Summarize the key points of your presentation and reiterate its importance in understanding pathophysiology.

Additional Requirements:

Citations: Properly cite all sources of information used in your presentation using a consistent academic style (e.g., APA, MLA).

References: Prepare a reference list at the end of your presentation, including all cited sources.

Evaluation:

Your presentation will be evaluated based on the clarity, accuracy, and depth of your content, your effective use of visuals and delivery, and your adherence to these requirements.