

Mo Tu We Th Fr Sa Su

Memo No. _____

Date / /

→ Ever since I opened my eyes on earth, I feel like this is what I was destined to be. As a child, I don't want to say that it's been my dream to be a doctor cause it was not. As I grew in life, my dream was also constantly changing from being a farmer to a airhostess to a teacher and finally a shop keeper. But somewhere inside me, I knew I have to be a doctor.

Running through hospital corridor playing hide and seek I grew up as my both parents belong to this field. People of my age, used to ask me. "You don't find it smelly." and I used to laugh about saying what smell. It's always like this.

Carrying tipin of my mother & passing it along while going to school, hospitals were always my second home in a good way. Growing up in small town where everyone knows each other, My father was my inspiration at that moment. Little did I know that he was very kind & respected doctor. I always used to think wow it's

Mo Tu We Th Fr Sa Su

Memo No. _____

Date / /

so cool that everyone praises my father & all he all he do is write few name of medicine in paper. I remember one when particular incident when i knew this is what i want to be. while playing in the ground, when i fell on the rock & i was crying so badly, at that time it was my father who gave me my first stitches on forehead & i thought this is so brave & i want to become one. from there I just wanted to be a doctor. when I entered medical school, I was like this is so easy, only little did I know how serious this matter be. while learning about basically you "a human being" you know how delicate the matter is. As the year pass by & we reached third year of medical school, I was excited as finally the clinical year started where we can interact with patient. I particularly remember my first day on medicine ward when we were told to take history from the patient in bengali language, i was petrified as it was not our native language. But when the patient saw us & the hope they had in their eyes is what I will never forget. I learned their language so that I can communicate very fluently with them. After that, I started enjoying talking to the patient, the smile they had when they see a doctor thinking us as some angel from god who will take their pain away is what inspire me the most.

Mo Tu We Th Fr Sa Su

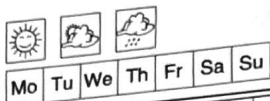

Memo No. _____

Date _____ / _____ / _____

But life ~~is~~ is always not that smooth. During my final fifth year exam, my father suffered from GIBS & he was deteriorating very fast. I was studying in Bangladesh & my mother didn't want to bother me as it was my final exam. One night when I called my father, he didn't pick up & I knew something was off cause it had ~~never~~ never happened in

5 years then my worst nightmare happened when my mother broke the news. Everyone told me not to come, but I knew I had to go because being a doctor was my father's dream & I knew I couldn't leave him all alone. I boarded my flight & went back home. I vividly remember the moment I opened that door of the hospital room, & my dad saw me, he was raising his both hands & legs to show me his improvement from GBS. As we all know it's an ascending paralysis, he was just showing his daughter that he is improving & he can use his hand & legs. That moment is what ~~it~~ became a deciding factor to be a doctor "an internal medicine" physician.

↔ After I finished my medical school, I gave my licensed exam on Nepal. I told my parent that I want to pursue my career in America, which was shocked to them cause they 'did not know it was coming. They told me to not to do it & was strictly against it. But I knew it all along.

Mo Tu We Th Fr Sa Su

Memo No. _____

Date / /

from the day in medical school that I want to be and become a doctor in United States. From my childhood I knew I will go to America & I used to think it in my head. As a girl, I was always insecure about my face as I had multiple simple moles on my face which was growing as I grew up & no matter what people used to say, I always felt that this is what all they see in me. So I always knew I wanted to become a doctor & will do surgery or invent some medicine for it.

I started doing my USMLE process but I didn't know where to start. ~~As being~~ a Due to lack of my friend in Nepal because I didn't do MBBS in Nepal, I didn't know whom to ask. It took me a lot of time to figure out simple things like doing your notary etc.