

IMMIGRATION TO THE UNITED STATES

21

Immigration is individuals, families or groups who leave their countries in order to have a better life. There are millions of people who have immigrated to the United States from time immemorial to the present for several reasons. For example, getting jobs better than they do in their own countries, getting a better education, and many emigrating because their countries are in a war and they want a stable life. In this literature, I will compare the effects of immigration the United States, the mechanism of immigration, the economy, and cultures, how to obtain American citizenship, legal and illegal immigration, and education.

According to the book Immigration, it is true that immigration affects a large number of people in the United States, therefore, ensuring that different government projects do not go on as per the expectations of the government officials (Stuart, 2010). This book has outlined that the migration of people from one country to another has both positive and negative impacts on the country. However, it is the responsibility of the government to ensure that the members of the public are sustained in an effective manner to enable them to live in peace and harmony with each other.

The book has again reiterated that every year, millions of Americans move from one place to another in search of job opportunities, hence making their living standards better. The people can again move from place to place in search of their family members. The articles and the books have stated that in countries like the United States, there are both illegal and legal immigration cases. More than 11 million Americans can be termed as illegal immigrants; hence ineffectiveness of the current policies is experienced.

What ?

Moreover, the people in the United States can be forced to move from one place to another due to the nature of politics carried out in the country. The politics in the country bring about instability in the country which forces people to move to the peaceful parts of the world.

The movement of the people from one country as a result of the instability in their country can be solved by bringing about stability in the country's politics. That can again be addressed by bringing in policies and reforms in the country which make it easy for the government to facilitate the excellent stay of its citizens.

The book has made it clear that the government should ensure that the economy is not biased as that might result in the migration of the people to different parts of the world. That can, therefore, be solved by coming up with different reforms and policies which make it easy for the people to be contained in the country.

When the people move from one country to the other, they end up making it hard for the country in which they migrate from to achieve its objectives as the workforce in that country is reduced. The government should come up with strategies which ensure that the citizens' needs are addressed accordingly to reduce their exposure to hardships which can force them to move from their home country (Bisin, 2017).

When the needs of the customers are addressed, it becomes hard for them to migrate from one country to the other due to the fact that an enabling environment is created for them to work for the sake of developing their mother country. Again, critical aspects of economic and cultural debates should be done in a way that does not affect the dignities of the people in society.

On the other hand, the article "Race, Religion, and Immigration Policy Attitudes" is different from the book because it has been used to address the issues contributing to the immigration of people (Khari and Brown, 2017). However, the article has made it clear that the immigration cases in the country are increased by the increased discriminations according to race and the social problems experienced by the people in the country. This article is different from the book because the book has addressed the effects of immigration on the country.

However, the articles have raised issues that race, religion and different policies put in place by the government contribute to immigration in the United States. The policies put in place by the government help in ensuring that the members of the public do not experience the hardships which force them to migrate from one country to another (Orchowski, 2008).

As far as the strengths are concerned, the authors argued that when the policies are effectively implemented, they help in ensuring that the needs of the members of the public are addressed adequately, therefore, reducing the cases of immigration in the United States.

Moreover, for the citizens' needs to be addressed in the best way possible, the government ensures that the cases of discrimination are not experienced therefore making it easy for the people to live in peace and harmony.

On matters related to the weaknesses of the articles provided, the authors did not clarify the leading causes of the immigration experienced in the United States. In situations whereby the causes of Immigration are expressed, it becomes easy for different people to come up with the needed strategies to reduce such cases in the country.

Again, the authors should have specified the effects of immigration in the country as a way of trying to reduce such impacts as they might interfere with the economy of the country in a negative manner.

I'm going to stop comments in the text of your paper here and read to the end, mostly for content.

the need for you to strengthen your writing skills is probably the biggest problem here. As just one example it is usually difficult to tell what author(s) you are writing about, what country(ies) you are referring to, etc. Beyond a general lack of clarity in the left of your paper, you tend to be describing the content of the books/articles then comparatively critiquing the material. Also you spend far too much time writing about the topic of immigration (e.g.
the last 2 pages), rather than comparatively critiquing what the authors wrote about the topic. It is evident that,
to some extent, you do understand what you should have done here, but you need to strengthen your writing skills to be successful on this assignment.
