

NRNP 6645: 2 Psychotherapy with Multiple Modalities

3 May 7, 2022

4 Describe the personality disorder you selected, including the DSM-5 diagnostic criteria.

I selected Paranoid personality disorder and this is one of the most common types of personality disorder frequently encountered in the clinical setting despite being a chronic condition. A person with this condition experiences distrust and suspicion of others which is mentally associated. However, a person with Paranoid personality disorder does not have full-blown symptoms such as schizophrenia. Instances of violence and criminal cases are related to Paranoid personality disorder. The paranoia associated with the condition represents a paranoid cognitive style but not delusional psychosis (Paris, 2015). The diagnostic criteria in the DSM-5 define a pattern of inner experience and behaviour that begins in late adolescence or early adulthood
