

rider is wearing a helmet to protect his head from an accident, he will escape most head injuries. Goes Against previous point

Using A motorcycle does not ^{allow to} let you go shopping. You cannot carry your things on it. According to Wes Siler, "Giant 87-roll economy packs of toilet paper from Costco; full-size sheets of plywood from Home Depot; the entire contents of your dorm room or apartment; 12 kegs of beer for the frat party. How can you get that stuff on a bike?! The honest answer is you can't." For example, your home is empty; you do not have food and you are going to buy your food from Walmart. You cannot carry your food on your motorcycle. A motorcycle allows me to drive with freedom of movement. I am not a person who does a lot of shopping.

Finally, using a motorcycle as transportation is better than the car in many ways for college students. As I said, along with Wes Siler, motorcycles will not be disagreeable for college students if they have permission from their parents to own one. Everyone should ride a motorcycle.

↓
too dependent on
A single source,
eg ~~on~~ on a single
point → being cheaper.
You never went into convenience — why is finding good parking
important? could it be A reason?

I would suggest combining your reasons into one — it's cheaper in many ways. Then add convenience & one other advantage.