

Abdulrahman

Find something to lead up to this,

This book talks about the happiness that children bring to the family, and the kind of relationship that parents have when parenting begins. Sonora ~~was~~ happened to be listening to a sermon about self sacrifice and was deeply touched about her father ~~and~~ ^{It} was then that she thought that her father was worth having a day to be honored. The day was transformed to being the third Sunday of every June, and it was from that moment that it ~~adapted to being~~ ^{became} a global holiday where ~~thing that~~ people celebrate their fathers during that day. ~~From researches, the findings show that~~ ^I children do not actually bring the happiness that people expect them to ~~bring~~ ^{mean} instead it is normally the beginning of dissatisfaction among the parents. Couples tend to be happy during their first period of their marriage just before they have children. When children appear, and the parenting starts, it brings a lot of responsibility and slowly parents feel more obliged to take care of the children. The parenting further changes from being a happy task to being perceived as common household chores. When children begin to move out of the family, ^{parents} tend to have the empty nest syndrome as ^{they} ~~parents~~ feel that their most important work is no longer going to be recognized. Children make mistakes; parents do not feel like the children contribute to their happiness, but when a child decides to appreciate the parent by a small act, the parent will be greatly moved by the act.

What book?
Who's the author?
do you agree or disagree?
Summary 1 paragraph
What does David say about children and happiness? (put in summary)
Use quotes from book

What Gilbert wrote.