
BOOK II.

CHAP. I.

1. IT having been shewn in the foregoing Discourse,

1°. That Adam had not either by natural Right of Fatherhood, or by positive Donation from God, any such Authority over his Children, or Dominion over the World as is pretended.

2°. That if he had, his Heirs, yet, had no Right to it. 5

3°. That if his Heirs had, there being no Law of Nature nor positive Law of God that determines, which is the Right Heir in all Cases that may arise, the Right of Succession, and consequently of bearing Rule, could not have been certainly determined.

4°. That if even that had been determined, yet the knowledge 10 of which is the Eldest Line of Adam's Posterity, being so long since utterly lost, that in the Races of Mankind and Families of the World, there remains not to one above another, the least pretence to be the Eldest House, and to have the Right of Inheritance.

All these premises having, as I think, been clearly made out, 15 it is impossible that the Rulers now on Earth, should make any benefit, or derive any the least shadow of Authority from that, which is held to be the Fountain of all Power, Adam's Private Dominion and Paternal Jurisdiction, so that, he that will not give just occasion, to think that all Government in the World is the product 20

§ 1 Chapter 1.—obviously written by Locke to bridge the gap between the fragmentary First Treatise and the Second, presumably in 1689. As originally composed, this book must have started at § 4 (chapter II), or perhaps at an introductory paragraph to this one, now cancelled—see note on II, § 54, 1. Locke may, of course, have modified this area of the text considerably in 1689.

This chapter is omitted from the French version of 1691, and so from all editions in languages other than English until recent years. It was also left out of the early American edition, Boston, 1773—see Introduction, 14.

20-2 This has been taken as a covert reference to Hobbes, and in fact may be a reminiscence of Filmer's attack on the Hobbesian state of nature: 'It is not to be only of Force and Violence, and that Men live together by no other Rules but that of Beasts, where the strongest carries it, and so lay a Foundation for perpetual Disorder and Mischief, Tumult, Sedition and Rebellion, (things that the followers of that Hypothesis so loudly cry out against) must of necessity find out another rise of Government, another Original of Political Power, and another way of designing and knowing the Persons that have it, then what Sir Robert F. hath taught us.

2. To this purpose, I think it may not be amiss, to set down what I take to be Political Power. That the Power of a Magistrate over a Subject, may be distinguished from that of a Father over his Children, a Master over his Servant, a Husband over his Wife, and a Lord over his Slave. All which distinct Powers happening sometimes together in the same Man, if he be considered under these different Relations, it may help us to distinguish these Powers one from another, and shew the difference betwixt a Ruler of a Common-wealth, a Father of a Family, and a Captain of a Galley.

3. Political Power then I take to be a Right of making Laws with Penalties of Death, and consequently all less Penalties, for the Regulating and Preserving of Property, and of employing the force of the Community, in the Execution of such Laws, and in the defence of the Common-wealth from Foreign Injury, and all this only for the Publick Good.

thought that God would create man in a condition worse than any beast, as if he had made men to no other end by nature but to destroy one another' (Laslett's edition, 241). Filmer was Hobbes's first critic, and Locke had read and noted this work of his at least as early as 1667—see Introduction, 33. Compare II, § 93, 30-2.

23-4 Compare I, §§ 3; 83; 106, 15-16; § 143.

§ 3 Compare the definition of respublica in Locke's Epistola de Tolerantia (1689, that is, closer to this chapter than to the text as a whole): 'The commonwealth seems to me to be a society of men constituted only for procuring and preserving their own civil interests (bona civilia)...therefore is the magistrate armed with the force and strength of all his subjects (toto scilicet subditorum robore) in order to the punishment of those that violate any other man's rights' (Klibansky and Gough, ed., 1968, 66-7, slightly differently translated). Here external security is omitted and property is replaced by bona civilia, defined as 'life, liberty, health and indolency of body; and the possession of outward things, such as money, lands, houses, furniture and the like (vitam, libertatem, corporis integritatem, et indolentiam, et rerum externarum possessiones, ut sunt latifundia, pecunia, supellex etc.)'. See Introduction, 102; and on capital laws, see I, § 129, 10-15 and note, II, §§ 87-9, 171. Elrington (1798) remarks on the distinction between power and right in this paragraph, implying that Locke confuses them.

CHAP. II.

Of the State of Nature.

4. TO understand Political Power right, and derive it from its Original, we must consider what State all Men are naturally in, and that is, a State of perfect Freedom to order their Actions, and dispose of their Possessions, and Persons as they think fit, within the bounds of the Law of Nature, without asking leave, 5 or depending upon the Will of any other Man.

A State also of Equality, wherein all the Power and Jurisdiction is reciprocal, no one having more than another: there being nothing more evident, than that Creatures of the same species and rank promiscuously born to all the same advantages of Nature, 10 and the use of the same faculties, should also be equal one amongst another without Subordination or Subjection, unless the Lord and Master of them all, should by any manifest Declaration of his Will set one above another, and confer on him by an evident and clear appointment an undoubted Right to Dominion and 15 Sovereignty.

§ 4 Chapter II The French and other versions begin with this chapter, and in Locke's original text there may have been only one paragraph before this point, introducing the whole work; see note on II, § 54, 1. Although it was extended when Locke added his Hooker material (see §§ 5 and 15) and certainly corrected to some extent, perhaps a great deal, in 1689—see, for example, §14, 12–17—there is no reason to suppose that it was not substantially completed in 1679.

2 'are'—Seliger points out that this means that the state of nature was not past history.

9–10 A reference to the Creation, compare I, §§ 25–7, etc.

9–11 Quoted verbatim by Molyneux, Case of Ireland, 1698 (1720 ed., 127).

11 'should'—to be read as imperative in feeling, for Locke recognized inequality in capacity. See II, § 54, and The Conduct of the Understanding: 'there is, it is visible, a great variety in men's understandings, and their natural constitutions. . . the woods of America, as well as the schools of Athens, produce men of several abilities in the same kind'. In the same work, however, he is prepared to use the example of the natural equality of men for the purpose of illustrating the necessity of bottoming, that is discovering a 'truth well settled in the understanding' (Works, 1801, III, 189 and 259). Compare Hobbes, Elements of Law (16, 4 (1928, p. 54): 'men considered in mere nature ought to admit amongst themselves equality', and the similar statements in Leviathan (chapter 13) and De Cive, though the context and grounds of this statement of Locke's are very different.

5. This equality of Men by Nature, the Judicious Hooker looks upon as so evident in it self, and beyond all question, that he makes it the Foundation of that Obligation to mutual Love amongst Men, on which he Builds the Duties they owe one another, and from whence he derives the great Maxims of Justice and Charity. His words are;

The like natural inducement, hath brought Men to know that it is no less their Duty, to Love others than themselves, for seeing those things which are equal, must needs all have one measure; If I cannot but wish to receive good, even as much at every Man's hands, as any Man can wish unto his own Soul, how should I look to have any part of my desire herein satisfied, unless my self be careful to satisfie the like desire, which is undoubtedly in other Men, being of one and the same nature? to have any thing offered them repugnant to this desire, must needs in all respects grieve them as much as me, so that if I do harm, I must look to suffer, there being no reason that others should shew greater measure of love to me, than they have by me, shewed unto them; my desire therefore to be lov'd of my equals in nature, as much as possible may be, imposeth upon me a natural Duty of bearing to themward, fully the like affection; From which relation of equality between our selves and them, that are as our selves, what several Rules and Canons, natural reason hath drawn for direction of Life, no Man is ignorant. Eccl. Pol. Lib. 1.

6. But though this be a State of Liberty, yet it is not a State of Licence, though Man in that State have an uncontroleable Liberty, § 5 1 It was probably Locke, slavishly followed by his friend Molyneux, who did most to give currency to the title 'judicious' to Richard Hooker. He was genuinely indebted to Hooker both in his philosophy and his political theory, and in his lists of recommended reading for young men he talks of the Ecclesiastical Polity as one of 'the most talked of' books on politics, and requires thorough study of 'the judicious Hooker's first book' (Works, 1801, III, 272; X, 308). But the reference to him here and throughout the Second Treatise was also intended to lend respectability to his position and to turn the flank of his opponents, especially the good churchmen amongst them.

7-23 Ecclesiastical Polity, Book 1, ch. VIII, § 7 (Keble ed. 1836, I, 288-9), not quite exactly quoted. Compare I, § 42 on Justice and Charity.

Like the other quotations from Hooker, this, and the rest of the paragraph with it, was probably added after the body of the text had been written (see Introduction, § 7 and note, II, § 239, 45 and note), probably on 28 June 1681, on which date Locke copied into his diary extracts from just before and just after this one (Ashcraft, 1987, 286 rejects this interpretation). All the extracts came from pp. 80-2 of the Ecclesiastical Polity which he had bought on 13 June. This was probably the 1676 edition, and it is referred to as such in these footnotes, but it could have been that of 1666, see Introduction, § 7.

to dispose of his Person or Possessions, yet he has not Liberty to destroy himself, or so much as any Creature in his Possession, but where some nobler use, than its bare Preservation calls for it. 5
 The State of Nature has a Law of Nature to govern it, which obliges every one: And Reason, which is that Law, teaches all Mankind, who will but consult it, that being all equal and independent, no one ought to harm another in his Life, Health, Liberty, or Possessions. For Men being all the Workmanship 10 of one Omnipotent, and infinitely wise Maker; All the Servants of one Sovereign Master, sent into the World by his order and about his business, they are his Property, whose Workmanship they are, made to last during his, not one another's Pleasure. And being furnished with like Faculties, sharing all in one Community 15 of Nature, there cannot be supposed any such Subordination among us, that may Authorize us to destroy one another, as if we were made for one another's uses, as the inferior ranks of Creatures are for ours. Every one as he is bound to preserve himself, and not to quit his Station wilfully; so by the like reason when his own 20 Preservation comes not in competition, ought he, as much as he can, to preserve the rest of Mankind, and may not unless it be to do Justice on an Offender, take away, or impair the life, or what tends to the Preservation of the Life, the Liberty, Health, Limb or Goods of another. 25

7. And that all Men may be restrained from invading others Rights, and from doing hurt to one another, and the Law of Nature be observed, which willeth the Peace and Preservation of all Mankind, the Execution of the Law of Nature is in that State, put into every Man's hands, whereby every one has a right to 5 punish the transgressors of that Law to such a Degree, as may hinder its Violation. For the Law of Nature would, as all other Laws that concern Men in this World, be in vain, if there were no body that in the State of Nature, had a Power to Execute that Law, and thereby preserve the innocent and restrain offenders, and if 10

§ 6 10-14 On man as God's workmanship see I, §§ 30, 52-4; 86; II § 56, 12-14; and as God's property I, § 85, 10-11; compare II, § 56, 12-14, and English Tract of 1660, II.

14-19 Compare I, §§ 86; 87; 92, 1-3 and note; II, § 135, 13-17. These statements are generally taken as directed against Hobbes, especially the thirteenth chapter of Leviathan, but there is no verbal resemblance.

18 'made for another's use'—Brogan, 1958, suggests a Kantian parallel.

any one in the State of Nature may punish another, for any evil he has done, every one may do so. For in that State of perfect Equality, where naturally there is no superiority or jurisdiction of one, over another, what any may do in Prosecution of that Law, 15 every one must needs have a Right to do.

8. And thus in the State of Nature, one Man comes by a Power over another; but yet no Absolute or Arbitrary Power, to use a Criminal when he has got him in his hands, according to the passionate heats, or boundless extravagancy of his own Will, but 5 only to retribute to him, so far as calm reason and conscience dictates, what is proportionate to his Transgression, which is so much as may serve for Reparation and Restraint. For these two are the only reasons, why one Man may lawfully do harm to another, which is that we call punishment. In transgressing the 10 Law of Nature, the Offender declares himself to live by another Rule, than that of reason and common Equity, which is that measure God has set to the actions of Men, for their mutual security: and so he becomes dangerous to Mankind, the tie, which is to secure them from injury and violence, being slighted 15 and broken by him. Which being a trespass against the whole Species, and the Peace and Safety of it, provided for by the Law of Nature, every man upon this score, by the Right he hath to preserve Mankind in general, may restrain, or where it is necessary, destroy things noxious to them, and so may bring such evil on 20 any one, who hath transgressed that Law, as may make him repent the doing of it, and thereby deter him, and by his Example others, from doing the like mischief. And in this case, and upon this ground, every Man hath a Right to punish the Offender, and be Executioner of the Law of Nature.

9. I doubt not but this will seem a very strange Doctrine to some Men: but before they condemn it, I desire them to resolve

§ 8 6 'proportionate'—at this word sheet P ends and sheet Q begins in the first printing. This sheet exists in variant states (see Laslett, 1952 (iv), and Bowers, Gerritsen and Laslett, 1954 (ii)). Even more than in the case of the later part of sheet P (see 1, § 167, 10 and note), any part of it may be the result of Locke's last-minute modifications. It ends with the last word of § 21.

§ 9 1 'strange Doctrine'—this seems to be Locke's way of announcing that his doctrine of punishment was, or was intended by him to be, a novelty; compare II, § 13, 1; II, § 180, 6 and Introduction, 97. It is certainly in subtle contrast with Hobbes's doctrine in chapter 28 of Leviathan, with which it is often compared. The me, by what Right any Prince or State can put to death, or punish an Alien, for any Crime he commits in their Country. 'Tis certain their Laws by vertue of any Sanction they receive from the promulgated Will of the Legislative, reach not a Stranger. They speak not to him, nor if they did, is he bound to hearken to them. The Legislative Authority, by which they are in Force over the Subjects of that Common-wealth, hath no Power over him. Those who have the Supream Power of making Laws in England, France or Holland, are to an Indian, but like the rest of the World, Men without Authority: And therefore if by the Law of Nature, every Man hath not a Power to punish Offences against it, as he soberly judges the Case to require, I see not how the Magistrates of any Community, can punish an Alien of another Country, since in reference to him, they can have no more Power, than what every Man naturally may have over another.

10. Besides the Crime which consists in violating the Law, and varying from the right Rule of Reason, whereby a Man so far becomes degenerate, and declares himself to quit the Principles of Human Nature, and to be a noxious Creature, there is commonly injury done to some Person or other, and some other Man receives damage by his Transgression, in which Case he who hath received any damage, has besides the right of punishment common to him with other Men, a particular Right to seek Reparation from him that has done it. And any other Person who finds it just, may also joyn with him that is injur'd, and assist him in recovering from the Offender, so much as may make satisfaction for the harm he has suffer'd.

11. From these two distinct Rights, the one of Punishing the Crime for restraint, and preventing the like Offence, which right of punishing is in every body; the other of taking reparation, which belongs only to the injured party, comes it to pass that the Magistrate, who by being Magistrate, hath the common right of whole of Locke's Second Letter on Toleration (1690) is concerned with punishment as a means of 'Reparation and Restraint'.

10-12 That is to say the Indian, presumably the American Indian, is in a state of nature with respect to all established political power, which implies there is no international law (see Cox, 1960, 138).

§ 10 On this paragraph, Elrington comments (1798) that throughout the whole of this treatise Locke's 'zeal for liberty has very frequently led him to speak of men's duties as rights which they may exercise or renounce at pleasure'.

4 'noxious Creature'—compare II, § 172, 9-19, note and references.

punishing put into his hands, can often, where the publick good demands not the execution of the Law, remit the punishment of Criminal Offences by his own Authority, but yet cannot remit the satisfaction due to any private Man, for the damage he has 10 received. That, he who has suffered the damage has a Right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit: The damnified Person has this Power of appropriating to himself, the Goods or Service of the Offender, by Right of Self-preservation, as every Man has a Power to punish the Crime, to prevent its being com-
 15 mitted again, by the Right he has of Preserving all Mankind, and doing all reasonable things he can in order to that end: And thus it is, that every Man in the State of Nature, has a Power to kill a Murderer, both to deter others from doing the like Injury, which no Reparation can compensate, by the Example of the 20 punishment that attends it from every body, and also to secure Men from the attempts of a Criminal, who having renounced Reason, the common Rule and Measure, God hath given to Mankind, hath by the unjust Violence and Slaughter he hath committed upon one, declared War against all Mankind, and therefore may 25 be destroyed as a Lyon or a Tyger, one of those wild Savage Beasts, with whom Men can have no Society nor Security: And upon this is grounded the great Law of Nature, Who so sheddeth Mans Blood, by Man shall his Blood be shed. And Cain was so fully convinced, that every one had a Right to destroy such a Criminal, that after 30 the Murther of his Brother, he cries out, Every one that findeth me, shall slay me; so plain was it writ in the Hearts of all Mankind.

12. By the same reason, may a Man in the State of Nature punish the lesser breaches of that Law. It will perhaps be demanded, § 11 6-8 Compare II, § 159, 24-6. The power of pardon was the fourth mark of sovereignty (Bodin, Methodus, 1945, 173, see I, § 129, 10-15, note and references, II, § 88, 4-6) and Locke may be following the traditional argument here.

24-6 Compare II, § 172, 18-19 (verbal parallel), note and references.

27-8 Genesis ix. 6: a divine command is equated here with a law of nature.

30-1 Genesis iv. 14. The final phrase is the most conspicuous instance in the whole book of Locke's willingness here to take advantage of the belief in innate ideas and innate practical principles, excoriated in Book I of his Essay concerning Humane Understanding. The words 'writ in the Hearts' are typical of what Yolton (1956, section 11) calls the naïve form of the belief, and the principle at issue cannot well be explained as an exception, as in the case of a similar passage in I, § 86, 19-21—see note and references there. He would seem to imply here that his whole 'strange doctrine' about punishment was part of innate knowledge, a possibility he had rejected as early as 1659-64, see Von Leyden, 1954.

with death? I answer, Each Transgression may be punished to that degree, and with so much Severity as will suffice to make it an ill bargain to the Offender, give him cause to repent, and terrifie 5 others from doing the like. Every Offence that can be committed in the State of Nature, may in the State of Nature be also punished, equally, and as far forth as it may, in a Common-wealth; for though it would be besides my present purpose, to enter here into the particulars of the Law of Nature, or its measures of punishment; yet, 10 it is certain there is such a Law, and that too, as intelligible and plain to a rational Creature, and a Studier of that Law, as the positive Laws of Common-wealths, nay possibly plainer; As much as Reason is easier to be understood, than the Phansies and intricate Contrivances of Men, following contrary and hidden interests 15 put into Words; For so truly are a great part of the Municipal Laws of Countries, which are only so far right, as they are founded on the Law of Nature, by which they are to be regulated and interpreted.

13. To this strange Doctrine, viz. That in the State of Nature, every one has the Executive Power of the Law of Nature, I doubt not but it will be objected, That it is unreasonable for Men to be Judges in their own Cases, that Self-love will make Men partial 5 to themselves and their Friends. And on the other side, that Ill Nature, Passion and Revenge will carry them too far in punishing others. And hence nothing but Confusion and Disorder will follow, and that therefore God hath certainly appointed § 12 9-10 For Locke's attitude to the law of nature and the claim that it was always beside his present purpose to give its particulars, see Introduction, 82.

10-12 Compare II, § 124, 8-9, verbal parallel.

13-19 This passage is indicative of Locke's hostility to those who would multiply laws, indeed to the law, law-courts and lawyers, especially the Common Lawyers, in general (compare I, § 90, 29-31, note and references). This he shared with the 1st Earl of Shaftesbury: see the 79th and 80th Fundamental Constitutions of Carolina, which provide that all statute laws should be null after a century, and that no comments upon the Constitutions should be permitted. Elrington (1798) comments that this criterion of a nation's law in terms of natural law, and not the will of a majority, 'points out the true principles of civil government'.

16-19 Compare II, § 135, 23-6, and the striking parallels pointed out by Von Leyden in the Essays on the Laws of Nature, 118-19, 188-9, of his 1954 edition.

§ 13 1-2 See II, § 9, 1, note and references. Pollock, 1904, 241-2, comments on a 'strange verbal parallel in that strangest of medieval vagaries the Mirror of Justices . . . "Ordinary jurisdiction has every one who is not deprived of it by sin, for every one may judge his neighbour according to the holy rules of right", Book IV, chap II.' On the Mirror see II § 239, 42-3 and note.

Government to restrain the partiality and violence of Men. I easily 10 grant, that Civil Government is the proper Remedy for the Inconveniences of the State of Nature, which must certainly be Great, where Men may be Judges in their own Case, since 'tis easily to be imagined, that he who was so unjust as to do his Brother an Injury, will scarce be so just as to condemn himself for it: But 15 I shall desire those who make this Objection, to remember that Absolute Monarchs are but Men, and if Government is to be the Remedy of those Evils, which necessarily follow from Mens being Judges in their own Cases, and the State of Nature is therefore not to be endured, I desire to know what kind of Government 20 that is, and how much better it is than the State of Nature, where one Man commanding a multitude, has the Liberty to be Judge in his own Case, and may do to all his Subjects whatever he pleases, without the least liberty to any one to question or controule those who Execute his Pleasure? And in whatsoever he doth, 25 whether led by Reason, Mistake or Passion, must be submitted to? Much better it is in the State of Nature wherein Men are not bound to submit to the unjust will of another: And if he that judges, judges amiss in his own, or any other Case, he is answerable for it to the rest of Mankind.

14. 'Tis often asked as a mighty Objection, Where are, or ever were, there any Men in such a State of Nature? To which it may suffice as an answer at present; That since all Princes and Rulers of Independent Governments all through the World, are in a State 5 of Nature, 'tis plain the World never was, nor ever will be, without Numbers of Men in that State. I have named all Governors of Independent Communities, whether they are, or are not, in League with others: For 'tis not every Compact that puts an end to the State of Nature between Men, but only this one of agreeing 22-7 Modified by Locke in his final corrections.

1-8 Governments in a state of nature with each other: compare II, § 183, 7-8, II, § 184, 31-2 (an aside in both cases). It is often assumed that Locke was following Hobbes here, perhaps consciously: compare Leviathan, chapter 13 (1904, 85), where the sequence of thought is much the same. But Gierke insists that this conception was a commonplace with the natural-law theorists of the time (1934, i, 97): he cites ten authorities on the point (ii, 288), including Pufendorf's Elementa and De Jure Naturae. If Locke had any writer specifically in mind, it seems most likely that it was Pufendorf. See Introduction, 73.

together mutually to enter into one Community, and make one 10 Body Politick; other Promises and Compacts, Men may make one with another, and yet still be in the State of Nature. The Promises and Bargains for Truck, &c. between the two Men in the Desert Island, mentioned by Garcilasso De la vega, in his History of Peru, or between a Swiss and an Indian, in the Woods 15 of America, are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a State of Nature, in reference to one another. For Truth and keeping of Faith belongs to Men, as Men, and not as Members of Society.

15. To those that say, There were never any Men in the State of Nature; I will not only oppose the Authority of the Judicious Hooker, Eccl. Pol. Lib. 1. Sect. 10. where he says, The Laws which have been hitherto mentioned, i.e. the Laws of Nature, do bind Men absolutely, even as they are Men, although they have never any settled 5 fellowship, never any Solemn Agreement amongst themselves what to do or not to do, but for as much as we are not by our selves sufficient to furnish our selves with competent store of things, needful for such a Life, as our Nature doth desire, a Life, fit for the Dignity of Man; therefore 12-17 In the first state of the 1st edition this passage reads differently, and is the most important variation between the two states. The bargains for truck there are 'Between the two Men in Soldania, in or between, a Swiss and an Indian' and Garcilasso's desert island is not mentioned. It is clear that Locke did not simply add, in the second state, a phrase omitted in the first, because Soldania (Saldanha Bay in South Africa) is not mentioned by Garcilasso, who is concerned with America. Locke seems to have decided to omit this imperfect reference to Soldania altogether, and to substitute for it this incident from Book 1, chapter 8 of Garcilasso's Commentarios Reales (34-43, of his French translation of 1633; see note on 1, § 57, 18 and compare 1, § 153, 19-20 and note). He made the following note in his diary on 8 February 1687: 'Pedro Serrano that lived three years in a desolate island alone and after that time another shipwrecked man came to him and being but two they could not agree. Garcilasso de la Vega, Histoire des Incas 1. 1. c. 8.' This correction, therefore, raises the possibility that Locke wrote this passage in 1687, which is considered in the Introduction, 54. The original reference to the Hottentots of Soldania was genuine enough, for Locke frequently cited the example of this people as having no belief in God: these references (in the Essay and elsewhere) are listed in Von Leyden, 1954, 65, 81, for Locke cited this region along with Brazil as early as his fifth Essay on the Law of Nature (early 1660's, op. cit. 174). His information probably came from Terry's Voyage to East India, 1655, which was on his shelves in 1681.

§ 15 3-13 Hooker, ed. Keble, 1836, Volume 1, pages 298-9, fairly accurately quoted, with alterations of punctuation. It comes from p. 85 of Locke's 1676 edition, a little after a passage copied into his diary on 2 June 1681; see note on 11, § 5, 7-23.

10. to supply those Defects and Imperfections which are in us, as living singly and solely by our selves, we are naturally induced to seek Communion and Fellowship with others, this was the Cause of Mens uniting themselves, at first in Politick Societies. But I moreover affirm, That all Men are naturally in that State, and remain so, till by their own Consents 15 they make themselves Members of some Politick Society; And I doubt not in the Sequel of this Discourse, to make it very clear.

CHAP. III.

Of the State of War.

16. THE State of War is a State of Enmity and Destruction; And therefore declaring by Word or Action, not a passionate and hasty, but a sedate settled Design, upon another Mans Life, puts him in a State of War with him against whom he has 5 declared such an Intention, and so has exposed his Life to the others Power to be taken away by him, or any one that joyns with him in his Defence, and espouses his Quarrel: it being reasonable and just I should have a Right to destroy that which threatens me with Destruction. For by the Fundamental Law of § 16 Chapter III In the same way as chapter II (see note on § 4) this was presumably substantially written in 1679, but certainly amended and extended in 1689 (see, for example, § 17, 18–21 and note) and its text was the subject of the printing confusion in that year.

1 The large type, which is the most conspicuous feature distinguishing the first from the second state of the 1st edition, begins at this point and continues until line 15 of § 17. It may well be the result of the cutting out of part of the text by Locke during the course of printing, but this cannot be confirmed bibliographically, and even if it happened the passage excised need not have come from this area of large type—see Introduction, 8, Laslett, 1952 (iv), and Bowers, Gerritsen and Laslett, 1954. In the second state of the 1st edition the type of this area is of normal size, but it has two variant readings in this paragraph.

9–10 Compare II, § 6, 22; § 7, 3–4; § 128, 3–4; § 129, 1–2; § 135, 31; § 149, 24–5; § 159, 17–18; § 171, 12, etc., and Tyrrell, 1681, 15. On Locke's tendency to regard this law of universal preservation as the fundamental natural law, see footnote to the Introduction, 97. In his Education (1695) he says, 'And truly, if the preservation of all mankind, as much as in him lies, were every one's persuasion, as indeed it is every one's duty, and the true principle to regulate our religion, politics and morality by, the world would be much quieter, and better-natured, than it is' (Works, 1801, IX, 113).

Nature, Man being to be preserved, as much as possible, when all 10 cannot be preserv'd, the safety of the Innocent is to be preferred:
And one may destroy a Man who makes War upon him, or has discovered an Enmity to his being, for the same Reason, that he may kill a Wolf or a Lyon; because such Men are not under the ties of the Common Law of Reason, have no other Rule, but 15 that of Force and Violence, and so may be treated as Beasts of Prey, those dangerous and noxious Creatures, that will be sure to destroy him, whenever he falls into their Power.

17. And hence it is, that he who attempts to get another Man into his Absolute Power, does thereby put himself into a State of War with him; It being to be understood as a Declaration of a Design upon his Life. For I have reason to conclude, that he who would get me into his Power without my consent, would 5 use me as he pleased, when he had got me there, and destroy me too when he had a fancy to it: for no body can desire to have me in his Absolute Power, unless it be to compel me by force to that, which is against the Right of my Freedom, i.e. make me a Slave.
To be free from such force is the only security of my Preservation: 10 and reason bids me look on him, as an Enemy to my Preservation, who would take away that Freedom, which is the Fence to it:
so that he who makes an attempt to enslave me, thereby puts himself into a State of War with me. He that in the State of Nature, would take away the Freedom, that belongs to any one in that State, 15 must necessarily be supposed to have a design to take away every thing else, that Freedom being the Foundation of all the rest:
As he that in the State of Society, would take away the Freedom belonging to those of that Society or Common-wealth, must be supposed to design to take away from them every thing else, 20 and so be looked on as in a State of War.

18. This makes it Lawful for a Man to kill a Thief, who has not in the least hurt him, nor declared any design upon his Life, any farther then by the use of Force, so to get him in his Power, 16-17 'Beasts of Prey . . . noxious Creatures'—compare II, § 172, 18-19, note and references: 'and so' to the end of the paragraph may be an addition of 1689.

§ 17 15 'State'—end of large type in first state of 1st edition, see II, § 16, 1.

18-21 This last sentence may be an interpolation of 1689, an implication that James II was 'in a State of War' with Englishmen. Indeed § 18 follows more naturally on to § 16, and the whole paragraph may have been inserted.

§ 18 1 Compare II, § 207, 12-13.

as to take away his Money, or what he pleases from him: because 5 using force, where he has no Right, to get me into his Power, let his pretence be what it will, I have no reason to suppose, that he, who would take away my Liberty, would not when he had me in his Power, take away every thing else. And therefore it is 10 Lawful for me to treat him, as one who has put himself into a State of War with me, i.e. kill him if I can; for to that hazard does he justly expose himself, whoever introduces a State of War, and is aggressor in it.

19. And here we have the plain difference between the State of Nature, and the State of War, which however some Men have confounded, are as far distant, as a State of Peace, Good Will, Mutual Assistance, and Preservation, and a State of Enmity, 5 Malice, Violence, and Mutual Destruction are one from another.
 Men living together according to reason, without a common Superior on Earth, with Authority to judge between them, is properly the State of Nature. But force, or a declared design of force upon the Person of another, where there is no common 10 Superior on Earth to appeal to for relief, is the State of War: And 'tis the want of such an appeal gives a Man the Right of War even against an aggressor, though he be in Society and a fellow Subject. Thus a Thief, whom I cannot harm but by appeal to the Law, for having stolen all that I am worth, I may kill, when he 15 sets on me to rob me, but of my Horse or Coat: because the Law, which was made for my Preservation, where it cannot interpose to secure my Life from present force, which if lost, is capable of no reparation, permits me my own Defence, and the Right of War, a liberty to kill the aggressor, because the aggressor allows 20 not time to appeal to our common Judge, nor the decision of § 19 1-5 A comma should be understood after 'which'. Locke altered the last phrase of this sentence, but then restored the previous reading. The 'some men' can only be the Hobbesists. Compare II, §§ 6 and 7 for the general position and Locke's Essays on the Law of Nature, c. 1661. In his fifth Essay he leaves it as a possibility that 'there is in the state of nature a general war and a perpetual and deadly hatred among men' as is maintained by some (quod aliqui volunt)—Von Leyden's edition, 1954, 162-3. But in his eighth Essay he pronounces against those 'some'. For if by the law of nature men are in a state of war, 'all society is abolished, and all faith, which is the bond of society' (tollitur omnis societas et societatis vinculum fides); see II, § 212, 9-13, and the Introduction. The peaceful condition of the state of nature should be compared with the dangers etc. talked of in II, §§ 13, 92, 101, 123-4, etc.

31-21 Compare II, § 182, 22-3.

the Law, for remedy in a Case, where the mischief may be irreparable. Want of a common Judge with Authority, puts all Men in a State of Nature: Force without Right, upon a Man's Person, makes a State of War, both where there is, and is not, a common Judge.

20. But when the actual force is over, the State of War ceases between those that are in Society, and are equally on both sides Subjected to the fair determination of the Law; because then there lies open the remedy of appeal for the past injury, and to prevent future harm: but where no such appeal is, as in the State of Nature, for want of positive Laws, and Judges with Authority to appeal to, the State of War once begun, continues, with a right to the innocent Party, to destroy the other whenever he can, until the aggressor offers Peace, and desires reconciliation on such Terms, as may repair any wrongs he has already done, and secure the innocent for the future: nay where an appeal to the Law, and constituted Judges lies open, but the remedy is deny'd by a manifest perverting of Justice, and a barefaced wresting of the Laws, to protect or indemnify the violence or injuries of some Men, or Party of Men, there it is hard to imagine any thing but a State of War. For wherever violence is used, and injury done, though by hands appointed to administer Justice, it is still violence and injury, however colour'd with the Name, Pretences, or Forms of Law, the end whereof being to protect and redress the innocent, § 20 2 'sides'—at this point begins the passage which is present in the second state of the 1st edition, but absent in the first state, see Introduction, 8, Laslett, 1952 (iv) and Bowers, Gerritsen and Laslett, 1954. In the first state the text goes straight on to 'And therefore in such Controversies, . . .' at the beginning of line 15 in § 21, thus: '20. But when the actual force is over, the State of War ceases between those that are in Society, and are equally on both sides Subject to the Judge: And therefore in such controversies . . .' (and so on, identically with the text in the second state to the end of the paragraph, starting the next as § 22. No sign for a § 21 is present). This anomaly has been variously dealt with by editors of the text; see footnote 2 to p. 342 of Laslett, 1952 (iv) and footnote 1 to p. 83 of Laslett, 1954 (iv). W. S. Carpenter, the editor of the Everyman text (c. 1924, with many subsequent printings) misnumbered all the paragraphs from this point to 11, §§ 36, 37; see note on line 14 of 11, § 36. Elrington (1798) first noticed this peculiarity, and has a note here on it.

11-23 This passage may well be an addition of 1689, directly referring to the events of the Revolution: the final 'appeal to Heaven' being most significant. It contains (line 15) the phrase which inspired Elrington to the following protest against Locke's theory of resistance, or perhaps the interpretation put on it by Thomas Paine and others.

'But what shall we say of a theory which thus invests an individual with a right of throwing a whole society in confusion for the purpose of redressing his own particular grievance?'

20 by an unbiassed application of it, to all who are under it; wherever that is not bona fide done, War is made upon the Sufferers, who having no appeal on Earth to right them, they are left to the only remedy in such Cases, an appeal to Heaven.

21. To avoid this State of War (wherein there is no appeal but to Heaven, and wherein every the least difference is apt to end, where there is no Authority to decide between the Contenders) is one great reason of Mens putting themselves into Society,
 5 and quitting the State of Nature. For where there is an Authority, a Power on Earth, from which relief can be had by appeal, there the continuance of the State of War is excluded, and the Controversie is decided by that Power. Had there been any such Court, any superior Jurisdiction on Earth, to determine the right
 10 between Jephtha and the Ammonites, they had never come to a State of War, but we see he was forced to appeal to Heaven. The Lord the Judge (says he) be Judge this day between the Children of Israel, and the Children of Ammon, Judg. 11. 27. and then Prosecuting, and relying on his appeal, he leads out his Army to Battle:
 15 And therefore in such Controversies, where the question is put, who shall be Judge? It cannot be meant, who shall decide the Controversie; every one knows what Jephtha here tells us, that the Lord the Judge, shall judge. Where there is no Judge on Earth, the Appeal lies to God in Heaven. That Question then cannot 20 mean, who shall judge? whether another hath put himself in a State of War with me, and whether I may as Jephtha did, appeal to Heaven in it? Of that I my self can only be Judge in my own Conscience, as I will answer it at the great Day, to the Supream Judge of all Men.

§ 21 1-5 Hobbes had also made the social state a remedy for the state of war, and this sentence might be called Locke's closest formal approach to him in his political theory. It is interesting that it occurs in a passage omitted from one state of the 1st edition (see Laslett, 1952 (iv)), but it cannot be shown that the two facts are connected.

15 'And'—end of missing passage; see II, § 20, 2, note.

17 'Jephtha'—Locke evidently regarded the story of Jephthah as crucial to the scriptural foundations of his case about civil society and justice. See I, § 163, 32; II, § 109, 1-11; II, § 176, 28 and compare note on II, § 168, and references. Grotius and St Augustine before him had used the Jephthah story for political analysis, and Locke may have in mind the Calvinist position expressed by Jurieu (1689, 365) that the Judges, Jephthah among them, represented a stage between the anarchy of primeval innocence and established sovereignty, a stage which inevitably passed because of the effects of the Fall.

on the other, the State of War and Slavery ceases, as long as the Compact endures. For, as has been said, no Man can, by agreement, pass over to another that which he hath not in himself, a Power over his own Life.

I confess, we find among the Jews, as well as other Nations, that Men did sell themselves; but, 'tis plain, this was only to Drudgery, not to Slavery. For, it is evident, the Person sold was not under an Absolute, Arbitrary, Despotical Power. For the Master could not have power to kill him, at any time, whom, at a certain time, he was obliged to let go free out of his Service: and the Master of such a Servant was so far from having an Arbitrary Power over his Life, that he could not, at pleasure, so much as maim him, but the loss of an Eye, or Tooth, set him free, Exod. XXI.

CHAP. V.

Of PROPERTY.

25. WHETHER we consider natural Reason, which tells us, that Men, being once born, have a right to their Preservation, and consequently to Meat and Drink, and such other things, as Nature affords for their Subsistence: Or Revelation, which gives who had forfeited their lives 'by some Act that deserves Death' (§ 23, 10; compare Tyrrell, 1681, 62). Locke seems satisfied that the forays of the Royal Africa Company were just wars of this sort, and that the negroes captured had committed such acts. Locke on slavery is discussed by Polin, 1960, 277-81, and Dunn, 1969; 175 etc.

9-16 In Exod. xxi the Mosaic law regulates the treatment of bought servants; they are to be freed in the seventh, Jubilee year, not to be killed, to be freed if maimed by their masters. Hobbes notices this and Grotius calls it 'imperfecta servitus', II, v, 30 (1712, 264).

§ 25 Chapter v This important chapter is obviously integral to Locke's argument, and it is also obviously part of his polemic against Filmer—see notes on lines 9-16 and 16-19 below, and on II, § 38, 9-11, etc. Olivecrona takes a different view of 9-16 and the date of the chapter. There is nothing, however, to indicate that it was written in 1689, or at any time later than the first form of the book, though it was perhaps subsequently amended, and it will be remembered that it falls within that part of the 1st edition which could have been modified in the course of printing. Apart from this, it seems right to me to suppose that the chapter is to be dated between 1679 and 1681.

1-3 This discussion of property is referred to in I, § 87, 14-15, and I, § 86, 1-4 echoes the language used here. Kendall, 1941, 77, notes the illogical transition from 'men' here, meaning individuals, to 'mankind' in line 8.

5 us an account of those Grants God made of the World to Adam, and to Noah, and his Sons, 'tis very clear, that God, as King David says, Psal. CXV. xvj. has given the Earth to the Children of Men, given it to Mankind in common. But this being supposed, 10 it seems to some a very great difficulty, how any one should ever come to have a Property in any thing: I will not content my self to answer, That if it be difficult to make out Property, upon a supposition, that God gave the World to Adam and his Posterity in common; it is impossible that any Man, but one universal Monarch, should have any Property, upon a supposition, that God gave the 15 World to Adam, and his Heirs in Succession, exclusive of all the rest of his Posterity. But I shall endeavour to shew, how Men might come to have a property in several parts of that which God gave to Mankind in common, and that without any express Compact of all the Commoners.

26. God, who hath given the World to Men in common, hath also given them reason to make use of it to the best advantage of Life, and convenience. The Earth, and all that is therein, is given to Men for the Support and Comfort of their being. And 5 though all the Fruits it naturally produces, and Beasts it feeds, belong to Mankind in common, as they are produced by the spontaneous hand of Nature; and no body has originally a private Dominion, exclusive of the rest of Mankind, in any of them, as they are thus in their natural state: yet being given for the use of 10 Men, there must of necessity be a means to appropriate them some way or other before they can be of any use, or at all beneficial

6-8 The biblical evidence for original communism, or rather against the primacy of private property, is discussed at length in the First Treatise; see I, § 21 and on: the text from Psalm cxv is cited in I, § 31 as part of a reference to Filmer's case.

9-16 Compare the First Treatise. Olivecrona, 1975, argues that the lines were put in later and the paragraph and chapter were written in ignorance of Filmer's position, a view which I cannot share: see next note.

16-19 This sentence confirms that this paragraph, and the whole chapter on property which follows, were written with Filmer's works in mind, and as a direct refutation of them. For it was Filmer who has raised the difficulty that original communism could not give way to private property without the universal consent of mankind. The discussions in Hobbes (the Epistola Dedicatoria of De Cive, 1647, presents the issue most clearly), Grotius (1625, II, ii, 2) and Pufendorf (1672, IV, 3) do not discuss this crux as Filmer does.

§ 26 Compare and contrast the discussion of the goods of nature in this paragraph with Pufendorf, De Jure Naturae, 1672, IV, iv, 13, and Locke's own earlier sentiments in his eighth Essay on the Law of Nature, which are markedly different: Von Leyden, 1954, 210-11.

12-16 Compare II, § 28, 16-26, note and references.

to any particular Man. The Fruit, or Venison, which nourishes the wild Indian, who knows no Inclosure, and is still a Tenant in common, must be his, and so his, i.e. a part of him, that another can no longer have any right to it, before it can do him any good 15 for the support of his Life.

27. Though the Earth, and all inferior Creatures be common to all Men, yet every Man has a Property in his own Person. This no Body has any Right to but himself. The Labour of his Body, § 27 Compare Locke's introduction of the proposition about labour and property in this paragraph, its predecessor and those following, with that of Tyrrell: 'Supposing the Earth and the fruits thereof to have been at first bestowed in Common on all its inhabitants; yet since God's first command to man was, encrease and multiply, if he hath a right to perform the end, he hath certainly a right to the means of his preservation, and the propagation of his species, so that though the fruits of the earth, or beasts, for food, were all in common, yet when once any man had by his own labour acquired such a proportion of either as would serve the necessities of himself and Family, they became so much his own as that no man could without manifest injustice rob him of those necessities' (1681, 99-100, second pagination). Tyrrell goes on to talk of 'this sort of community' being retained among the Americans, the wild beast the Indian kills (compare II, § 30, 1-2), the fish he takes up (ibid. 8), the fruit of his trees and his venison (II, § 26, 12). But he talks in this parallel way in a different context. Following Grotius, he refers to the Stoic axiom about seats in the theatre, and cites many other arguments about property, ignored by Locke: for him the labour proposition is not the one rational method of making use of the earth's produce, but rather a ground for retaining property acquired, and he does not talk of a man owning himself (compare note on II, § 32, 1-7). These points, and the known relationship between them (see above, 59-61), it may imply that Locke suggested this line of thinking to Tyrrell, who followed it without quite realizing what it meant to Locke. It is not impossible that they arrived at this position independently, for in a work published in 1680 but described on the title as 'Mostly written many years past' Richard Baxter writes in vaguer but in similar terms: 'Propriety is naturally antecedent to Government, which doth not Give it, but regulate it to the Common good: Every man is born with a propriety in his own members, and nature giveth him a propriety in his Children, and his food and other just acquisitions of his industry. Therefore no Ruler can justly deprive men of their propriety, unless it be by some Law of God (as in execution of justice on such as forfeit it) or by their own consent, by themselves or their Delegates or Progenitors; And men's lives and Liberties are the chief parts of their propriety. That is the peoples just reserved Property, and Liberty, which neither God taketh from them, by the power which his own Laws give the Ruler, nor is given away by their own foresaid consent' (Baxter, 1680, 54-5; see Schlatter, 1957, 39, and compare passage from Baxter's Holy Commonwealth, cited by Gough, 1950, 80).

What Baxter says here about life, liberty and property shows that he had the same combined definition of property as Locke, both an extended and a specific definition; see Introduction, 101 and note on II, § 87, 5. It is possible to find many much vaguer hints at what is too loosely called the labour theory of value (in Petty, 1662, for example, of which Locke had the 1667 printing (H. and L. 2839), or even in Hobbes; see Gough, 1950, 81) but these are the only passages in books he may have read known to me which seem to show a systematic resemblance. See also the hint in I, § 42, 11-15.

2 Repeated in II, § 173, 5, cf. Walwyn, the Leveller quoted Macpherson, 1962, 140.

and the Work of his Hands, we may say, are properly his. What-5 soever then he removes out of the State that Nature hath provided, and left it in, he hath mixed his Labour with, and joyned to it something that is his own, and thereby makes it his Property.
 It being by him removed from the common state Nature placed it in, it hath by this labour something annexed to it, that excludes 10 the common right of other Men. For this Labour being the unquestionable Property of the Labourer, no Man but he can have a right to what that is once joyned to, at least where there is enough, and as good left in common for others.

28. He that is nourished by the Acorns he pickt up under an Oak, or the Apples he gathered from the Trees in the Wood, has certainly appropriated them to himself. No Body can deny but the nourishment is his. I ask then, When did they begin to 5 be his? When he digested? Or when he eat? Or when he boiled?
 Or when he brought them home? Or when he pickt them up?
 And 'tis plain, if the first gathering made them not his, nothing else could. That labour put a distinction between them and common. That added something to them more than Nature, the 10 common Mother of all, had done; and so they became his private right. And will any one say he had no right to those Acorns or Apples he thus appropriated, because he had not the consent of all Mankind to make them his? Was it a Robbery thus to assume to himself what belonged to all in Common? If such 15 a consent as that was necessary, Man had starved, notwithstanding the Plenty God had given him. We see in Commons, which remain § 28 1-4 Compare Pufendorf, De Jure Naturae, 1672, iv, iv, 13, 'Quercus erat nullius: quae deciderant glandes ejus fiebant, qui legisset'. Gough, 1950, draws attention to this parallel, and to Blackstone's account of the clash between Locke on the one hand and both Pufendorf and Grotius on the other in their views on the origin of property. For in spite of the above coincidence about acorns, Pufendorf follows Grotius in assigning the origin of property to universal agreement, not labour. Barbeyrac, in his edition of Pufendorf's De Jure Naturae, registers his agreement with Locke's views on this matter, and maintains that Locke was the first to formulate it, earlier than the only other author he quotes, C. G. Titius of Leipzig (1661-1714). He also notes that Locke's discussion grew out of his refutation of Filmer: Barbeyrac, 1734, i, 576-7. Barbeyrac corresponded with Locke (see Introduction, 75n), and no man in the early eighteenth century was in a generally better position than he to know about the relationship of his writings with the natural-law jurists and with the whole tradition of social and political theory.

16-26 Locke is using here the language of agrarian enclosure, the parcelling out of the common fields of the traditional manor as private property, which was so marked a feature of English economic history in the sixteenth century, in his own

so by Compact, that 'tis the taking any part of what is common, and removing it out of the state Nature leaves it in, which begins the Property; without which the Common is of no use. And the taking of this or that part, does not depend on the express consent 20 of all the Commoners. Thus the Grass my Horse has bit; the Turfs my Servant has cut; and the Ore I have digg'd in any place where I have a right to them in common with others, become my Property, without the assignation or consent of any body. The labour that was mine, removing them out of that common state 25 they were in, hath fixed my Property in them.

29. By making an explicit consent of every Commoner, necessary to any ones appropriating to himself any part of what is given in common, Children or Servants could not cut the Meat which their Father or Master had provided for them in common, without assigning to every one his peculiar part. Though the 5 Water running in the Fountain be every ones, yet who can doubt, but that in the Pitcher is his only who drew it out? His labour hath taken it out of the hands of Nature, where it was common, and belong'd equally to all her Children, and hath thereby appropriated it to himself. 10

30. Thus this Law of reason makes the Deer, that Indian's who hath killed it; 'tis allowed to be his goods who hath bestowed his labour upon it, though before, it was the common right of every one. And amongst those who are counted the Civiliz'd part of Mankind, who have made and multiplied positive Laws to deter- 5 mine Property, this original Law of Nature for the beginning of Property, in what was before common, still takes place; and by vertue thereof, what Fish any one catches in the Ocean, that great and still remaining Common of Mankind; or what Amber-griese any one takes up here, is by the Labour that removes it out 10 time to some extent, and even more in the eighteenth century; see also II, § 32, 7-10; § 35; § 42, 17-20; § 37, 10-29. It is not quite consistent with his statement about enclosure and the Indians in II, § 26, 12-16, for the Indian lived in a state of nature, before compact had taken place. Here 'Commons' must mean the common land of the traditional manorial system, remaining so 'by Compact'. As Locke makes clear in II, § 35, only the men of the manor, and not just anyone, could usually graze, turf and mine on the common land, and then only if the custom of the manor allowed. It is a bad example of communism. Lines 24-6 contain the only example of Locke transferring labour from one man to another. See the discussion in Macpherson, 1962, Laslett, 1964.

§ 30 1-4 Compare I, § 86, 19-28, Tully, 1980, Wood, 1984.

of that common state Nature left it in, made his Property who takes that pains about it. And even amongst us the Hare that any one is Hunting, is thought his who pursues her during the Chase. For being a Beast that is still looked upon as common, and no 15 Man's private Possession; whoever has imploy'd so much labour about any of that kind, as to find and pursue her, has thereby removed her from the state of Nature, wherein she was common, and hath begun a Property.

31. It will perhaps be objected to this, That if gathering the Acorns, or other Fruits of the Earth, &c. makes a right to them, then any one may ingross as much as he will. To which I Answer, Not so. The same Law of Nature, that does by this means give 5 us Property, does also bound that Property too. God has given us all things richly, 1 Tim. vi. 17. is the Voice of Reason confirmed by Inspiration. But how far has he given it us? To enjoy. As much as any one can make use of to any advantage of life before it spoils; so much he may by his labour fix a Property in. Whatever is 10 beyond this, is more than his share, and belongs to others. Nothing was made by God for Man to spoil or destroy. And thus considering the plenty of natural Provisions there was a long time in the World, and the few spenders, and to how small a part of that provision the industry of one Man could extend it self,
 15 and ingross it to the prejudice of others; especially keeping within the bounds, set by reason of what might serve for his use; there could be then little room for Quarrels or Contentions about Property so establish'd.

32. But the chief matter of Property being now not the Fruits of the Earth, and the Beasts that subsist on it, but the Earth it self; as that which takes in and carries with it all the rest: I think it is plain, that Property in that too is acquired as the former. As much
 5 Land as a Man Tills, Plants, Improves, Cultivates, and can use the Product of, so much is his Property. He by his Labour does, § 31 6 Compare 1, § 40, 19-20.

§ 32 1-7 Tyrrell extends the labour theory to the possession of land in the same way as Locke, but with the same difference. Labour confirms a man's property in what he rightfully possesses, 'since the owner hath possessed himself of this land, and bestowed his Labour and Industry upon it' no man can take it away (1681, 112, 2nd pagination). See note on 11, § 27.

as it were, inclose it from the Common. Nor will it invalidate his right to say, Every body else has an equal Title to it; and therefore he cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the Consent of all his Fellow-Commoners, all Mankind. God, when he gave the World in common to all Mankind, commanded Man also to labour, and the penury of his Condition required it of him. God and his Reason commanded him to subdue the Earth, i.e. improve it for the benefit of Life, and therein lay out something upon it that was his own, his labour. He that in Obedience to this Command of God, subdued, tilled and sowed any part of it, thereby annexed to it something that was his Property, which another had no Title to, nor could without injury take from him.

33. Nor was this appropriation of any parcel of Land, by improving it, any prejudice to any other Man, since there was still enough, and as good left; and more than the yet unprovided could use. So that in effect, there was never the less left for others because of his inclosure for himself. For he that leaves as much as another can make use of, does as good as take nothing at all. No Body could think himself injur'd by the drinking of another Man, though he took a good Draught, who had a whole River of the same Water left him to quench his thirst. And the Case of Land and Water, where there is enough of both, is perfectly the same.

34. God gave the World to Men in Common; but since he gave it them for their benefit, and the greatest Conveniencies of Life they were capable to draw from it, it cannot be supposed he meant it should always remain common and uncultivated. He gave it to the use of the Industrious and Rational, (and Labour was to be his Title to it;) not to the Fancy or Covetousness of the Quarrelsome and Contentious. He that had as good left for his Improvement, as was already taken up, needed not complain, ought not to meddle with what was already improved by another's Labour: If he did, 'tis plain he desired the benefit of another's Pains, which he had no right to, and not the Ground which God had given him in common with others to labour on, and whereof there was as good left, as that already possessed, and more than he knew what to do with, or his Industry could reach to.

35. 'Tis true, in Land that is common in England, or any other Country, where there is Plenty of People under Government, who have Money and Commerce, no one can inclose or appropriate any part, without the consent of all his Fellow-Commoners:
 5 Because this is left common by Compact, i.e. by the Law of the Land, which is not to be violated. And though it be Common, in respect of some Men, it is not so to all Mankind; but is the joint property of this Country, or this Parish. Besides, the remainder, after such inclosure, would not be as good to the rest
 10 of the Commoners as the whole was, when they could all make use of the whole: whereas in the beginning and first peopling of the great Common of the World, it was quite otherwise. The Law Man was under, was rather for appropriating. God Commanded, and his Wants forced him to labour. That was his Property
 15 which could not be taken from him where-ever he had fixed it. And hence subduing or cultivating the Earth, and having Dominion, we see are joyned together. The one gave Title to the other. So that God, by commanding to subdue, gave Authority so far to appropriate. And the Condition of Humane Life, which 20 requires Labour and Materials to work on, necessarily introduces private Possessions.

36. The measure of Property, Nature has well set, by the Extent of Mens Labour, and the Conveniency of Life: No Mans Labour could subdue, or appropriate all: nor could his Enjoyment consume more than a small part; so that it was impossible
 5 for any Man, this way, to intrench upon the right of another, or acquire, to himself, a Property, to the Prejudice of his Neighbour, who would still have room, for as good, and as large a Possession (after the other had taken out his) as before it was appropriated. This measure did confine every Man's Possession, to a very moderate
 10 Proportion, and such as he might appropriate to himself, without § 35 Here Locke seems to recognize the inappropriateness of agrarian enclosure to his argument (see note on 11, § 28, 16-26), but he persists. His statements are accurate, but vague, and it is interesting that the words 'Country' (presumably in its older meaning of 'locality') and 'Parish' are used where 'Manor' might be expected (line 8).

8 'property'—altered by Locke from 'propriety' in 1698; compare title to chapter VII of the First Treatise.

§ 36 9-25 The smallness of men's possessions in early Biblical times is commented on in 1, § 136, 11. This passage is a direct statement of Locke's assumption that the state of nature in contemporary America can be assimilated to the conditions of patriarchal times, compare note on 1, § 130.

Injury to any Body in the first Ages of the World, when Men were more in danger to be lost, by wandering from their Company, in the then vast Wilderness of the Earth, than to be straitned for want of room to plant in. And the same measure may be allowed still, without prejudice to any Body, as full as the World seems. 15
 For supposing a Man, or Family, in the state they were, at first peopling of the World by the Children of Adam, or Noah; let him plant in some in-land, vacant places of America, we shall find that the Possessions he could make himself upon the measures we have given, would not be very large, nor, even to this day, 20 prejudice the rest of Mankind, or give them reason to complain, or think themselves injured by this Man's Incroachment, though the Race of Men have now spread themselves to all the corners of the World, and do infinitely exceed the small number [which] was at the beginning. Nay, the extent of Ground is of so little 25 value, without labour, that I have heard it affirmed, that in Spain it self, a Man may be permitted to plough, sow, and reap, without being disturbed, upon Land he has no other Title to, but only his making use of it. But, on the contrary, the Inhabitants think themselves beholden to him, who, by his Industry on neglected, 30 and consequently waste Land, has increased the stock of Corn, which they wanted. But be this as it will, which I lay no stress on; This I dare boldly affirm, That the same Rule of Propriety, (viz.) that every Man should have as much as he could make use of, would hold still in the World, without straitning any body, 35 since there is Land enough in the World to suffice double the Inhabitants had not the Invention of Money, and the tacit Agreement of Men to put a value on it, introduced (by Consent) larger Possessions, and a Right to them; which, how it has done, I shall, by and by, shew more at large. 40

14 The Everyman text, having misnumbered its paragraphs since II, § 20, starts a new paragraph (§ 36) after 'plant in.', omitting the 'And'—see note on II, § 20, 2.

26-34 Private appropriation of waste land in this way was possible all over Spain in Locke's day, and is apparently still the custom in Andalusia. In Aragon the land, in the mountain area, had to be cleared within sixty days to become the property of the cultivator: in Catalonia such ownership became absolute once the plot had been worked, but lapsed if it was left uncultivated for three years: in Castile the labourer could only take enough for himself and his family. See Costa, 1898, 250-63. I owe this reference and information to Dr J. H. Elliott. Compare II, § 184, 27-9.

39-40 See II, § 45 and note: II, § 46 on.

37. This is certain, That in the beginning, before the desire of having more than Men needed, had altered the intrinsick value of things, which depends only on their usefulness to the Life of Man; or [Men] had agreed, that a little piece of yellow Metal, which 5 would keep without wasting or decay, should be worth a great piece of Flesh, or a whole heap of Corn; though Men had a Right to appropriate, by their Labour, each one to himself, as much of the things of Nature, as he could use: Yet this could not be much, nor to the Prejudice of others, where the same plenty was still 10 left, to those who would use the same Industry. To which let me add, that he who appropriates land to himself by his labour, does not lessen but increase the common stock of mankind. For the provisions serving to the support of humane life, produced by one acre of inclosed and cultivated land, are (to speak much 15 within compasse) ten times more, than those, which are yielded by an acre of Land, of an equal richnesse, lyeing waſt in common. And therefor he, that incloses Land and has a greater plenty of the conveniencys of life from ten acres, than he could have from an hundred left to Nature, may truly be said, to give ninety acres 20 to Mankind. For his labour now ſupplys him with provisions out of ten acres, which were but the product of an hundred lying in common. I have here rated the improved land very low in making its product but as ten to one, when it is much nearer an hundred to one. For I aske whether in the wild woods and 25 uncultivated waſt of America left to Nature, without any improvement, tillage or husbandry, a thousand acres will yield the needy and wretched inhabitants as many conveniencies of life as ten acres of equally fertile land doe in Devonshire where they are well cultivated?

30 Before the Appropriation of Land, he who gathered as much of the wild Fruit, killed, caught, or tamed, as many of the Beasts as he could; he that so employed his Pains about any of the § 37 4 'Men'—added by editor.

10–29 Passage added in two parts in the Christ's copy, also recalling English agrarian enclosure, or even justifying it; see note on 11, § 28, 16–26. It is taken by Macpherson (1951, 559 and 1962, 212 on) to have been inserted by Locke to remove the 'sufficiency limitation' on the acquisition of property, which obtained before money was introduced.

32–41 Cited by Kendall, 1941, 72, as a conspicuous example of 'the "public" right to interfere with the liberty and property of private persons', making against the individualist interpretation of Locke's theory of property; see Introduction, 105.

spontaneous Products of Nature, as any way to alter them, from the state which Nature put them in, by placing any of his Labour on them, did thereby acquire a Propriety in them: But if they 35 perished, in his Possession, without their due use; if the Fruits rotted, or the Venison putrified, before he could spend it, he offended against the common Law of Nature, and was liable to be punished; he invaded his Neighbour's share, for he had no Right, farther than his Use called for any of them, and they might 40 serve to afford him Conveniencies of Life.

38. The same measures governed the Possession of Land too: Whatsoever he tilled and reaped, laid up and made use of, before it spoiled, that was his peculiar Right; whatsoever he enclosed, and could feed, and make use of, the Cattle and Product was also his. But if either the Grass of his Inclosure rotted on the Ground, 5 or the Fruit of his planting perished without gathering, and laying up, this part of the Earth, notwithstanding his Inclosure, was still to be looked on as Waste, and might be the Possession of any other. Thus, at the beginning, Cain might take as much Ground as he could till, and make it his own Land, and yet leave enough 10 to Abel's Sheep to feed on; a few Acres would serve for both their Possessions. But as Families increased, and Industry enlarged their Stocks, their Possessions enlarged with the need of them; but yet it was commonly without any fixed property in the ground they made use of, till they incorporated, settled themselves together, and 15 built Cities, and then, by consent, they came in time, to set out the bounds of their distinct Territories, and agree on limits between them and their Neighbours, and by Laws within themselves, settled the Properties of those of the same Society. For we see, that in that part of the World which was first inhabited, and 20 therefore like to be best peopled, even as low down as Abraham's time, they wandred with their Flocks, and their Herds, which was their substance, freely up and down; and this Abraham did, in a Country where he was a Stranger. Whence it is plain, that at least, a great part of the Land lay in common; that the Inhabitants 25 valued it not, nor claimed Property in any more than they made use of. But when there was not room enough in the same place, for their Herds to feed together, they, by consent, as Abraham and Lot did, Gen. xiii. 5. separated and enlarged their pasture, where it best liked them. And for the same Reason Esau went from his Father, and his Brother, and planted in Mount Seir, Gen. xxxvi. 6.

§ 38 9-11 These three lines are a paraphrase of a quotation by Filmer from Selden's Mare Clausum; see Laslett's edition, 63-4. The passage is given in full in 1, § 76 and commented upon; see note there.

39. And thus, without supposing any private Dominion, and property in Adam, over all the World, exclusive of all other Men, which can no way be proved, nor any ones Property be made out from it; but supposing the World given as it was to the Children of Men in common, we see how labour could make Men distinct titles to several parcels of it, for their private uses; wherein there could be no doubt of Right, no room for quarrel.

40. Nor is it so strange, as perhaps before consideration it may appear, that the Property of labour should be able to over-balance the Community of Land. For 'tis Labour indeed that puts the difference of value on every thing; and let any one consider, what the difference is between an Acre of Land planted with Tobacco, or Sugar, sown with Wheat or Barley; and an Acre of the same Land lying in common, without any Husbandry upon it, and he will find, that the improvement of labour makes the far greater part of the value. I think it will be but a very modest Computation to say, that of the Products of the Earth useful to the Life of Man $\frac{9}{10}$ are the effects of labour: nay, if we will rightly estimate things as they come to our use, and cast up the several Expences about them, what in them is purely owing to Nature, and what to labour, we shall find, that in most of them $\frac{22}{100}$ are wholly to be put on the account of labour.

41. There cannot be a clearer demonstration of any thing, than several Nations of the Americans are of this, who are rich in Land, and poor in all the Comforts of Life; whom Nature having furnished as liberally as any other people, with the materials of 28-9 See I, § 135, 7, verbal parallel.

31 See I, § 117, 4-5. It is obvious from these parallels that this paragraph was written with Filmer's argument and Filmer's text in mind. Locke is sketching his account of the passage from a state of nature to a state of society in terms of biblical history.

§ 39 Also clearly directed against Filmer: its argument occupies a great deal of the First Treatise, which surely would have been referred to here if it had been written at the time.

Plenty, i.e. a fruitful Soil, apt to produce in abundance, what might serve for food, rayment, and delight; yet for want of improving it by labour, have not one hundredth part of the Conveniencies we enjoy: And a King of a large and fruitful Territory there feeds, lodges, and is clad worse than a day Labourer in England.

42. To make this a little clearer, let us but trace some of the ordinary provisions of Life, through their several progresses, before they come to our use, and see how much they receive of their value from Humane Industry. Bread, Wine and Cloth, are things of daily use, and great plenty, yet notwithstanding, Acorns, Water, and Leaves, or Skins, must be our Bread, Drink and Clothing, did not labour furnish us with these more useful Commodities. For whatever Bread is more worth than Acorns, Wine than Water, and Cloth or Silk than Leaves, Skins, or Moss, that is wholly owing to labour and industry. The one of these being the Food and Rayment which unassisted Nature furnishes us with; the other provisions which our industry and pains prepare for us, which how much they exceed the other in value, when any one hath computed, he will then see, how much labour makes the far greatest part of the value of things, we enjoy in this World: And the ground which produces the materials, is scarce to be reckon'd in, as any, or at most, but a very small, part of it; So little, that even amongst us, Land that is left wholly to Nature, that hath no improvement of Pasturage, Tillage, or Planting, is called, as indeed it is, wast; and we shall find the benefit of it amount to little more than nothing. This shews, how much numbers of men are to be preferd to largeness of dominions, and that the increase of lands

§ 42 17-21 A further reference to open-field tillage in England; see II, § 28, 16-26, note and references. The 'wast' (waste) of line 20 was the manorial land outside the fields, often a grazing area of some value, and Locke's implied criticism of the system is once more a little out of place in this context, though it is interesting that he should have made it.

21-8 A marginal addition in the Christ's copy, dating from the later 1690's (probably after 1698) and belonging therefore to the period of Locke's activities at the Board of Trade—see Laslett, 1957 (i). It is very significant of his attitude to that institution and his policy for it, and for King William III's government in its struggle with France, particularly the insistence on increased population (compare I, § 33, 13-27 and note) as against territory as a source of power, and the criticism of the 'narrownesse of Party'. The reference to a 'wise and godlike' Prince (compare II, § 166, 1), reveals the sense in which Locke, the enemy of divine-kingship, accepted the metaphor of divinity for the ruler as he thought of him.

and the right imploying of them is the great art of government. And that Prince who shall be so wise and godlike as by established 25 laws of liberty to secure protection and incouragement to the honest industry of Mankind against the oppression of power and narrownesse of Party will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. But this bye the bye. To return to the argument in hand.

43. An Acre of Land that bears here Twenty Bushels of Wheat, and another in America, which, with the same Husbandry, would do the like, are, without doubt, of the same natural, intrinsick Value. But yet the Benefit Mankind receives from the one, in 5 a Year, is worth 5 l. and from the other possibly not worth a Penny, if all the Profit an Indian received from it were to be valued, and sold here; at least, I may truly say, not $\frac{1}{1000}$. 'Tis Labour then which puts the greatest part of Value upon Land, without which it would scarcely be worth any thing: 'tis to that we owe 10 the greatest part of all its useful Products: for all that the Straw, Bran, Bread, of that Acre of Wheat, is more worth than the Product of an Acre of as good Land, which lies wast, is all the Effect of Labour. For 'tis not barely the Plough-man's Pains, the Reaper's and Thresher's Toil, and the Bakers Sweat, is to be 15 counted into the Bread we eat; the Labour of those who broke the Oxen, who digged and wrought the Iron and Stones, who felled and framed the Timber imployed about the Plough, Mill, Oven, or any other Utensils, which are a vast Number, requisite to this Corn, from its being seed to be sown to its being made 20 Bread, must all be charged on the account of Labour, and received as an effect of that: Nature and the Earth furnished only the almost worthless Materials, as in themselves. 'Twould be a strange Catalogue of things, that Industry provided and made use of, about every Loaf of Bread, before it came to our use, if we could trace them;
 25 Iron, Wood, Leather, Bark, Timber, Stone, Bricks, Coals, Lime, Cloth, Dying-Drugs, Pitch, Tar, Masts, Ropes, and all the Materials made use of in the Ship, that brought any of the Commodities made use of by any of the Workmen, to any part of the Work, all which, 'twould be almost impossible, at least too long, to reckon up.

44. From all which it is evident, that though the things of Nature are given in common, yet Man (by being Master of himself, and Proprietor of his own Person, and the Actions or Labour of it) had still in himself the great Foundation of Property; and that which made up the great part of what he applyed to the Support or Comfort of his being, when Invention and Arts had improved the conveniencies of Life, was perfectly his own, and did not belong in common to others.

45. Thus Labour, in the Beginning, gave a Right of Property, where-ever any one was pleased to imploy it, upon what was common, which remained, a long while, the far greater part, and is yet more than Mankind makes use of. Men, at first, for the most part, contented themselves with what un-assisted Nature offered to their Necessities: and though afterwards, in some parts of the World, (where the Increase of People and Stock, with the Use of Money) had made Land scarce, and so of some Value, the several Communities settled the Bounds of their distinct Territories, and by Laws within themselves, regulated the Properties of the private Men of their Society, and so, by Compact and Agreement, settled the Property which Labour and Industry began; and the Leagues that have been made between several States and Kingdoms, either expressly or tacitly disowning all Claim and Right to the Land in the others Possession, have, by common Consent, given up their Pretences to their natural common Right, which originally they had to those Countries, and so have, by positive agreement, settled a Property amongst themselves, in distinct Parts and parcels of the Earth: yet there are still great Tracts of Ground to be found, which (the Inhabitants thereof not having joyned with the rest of Mankind, in the consent of the Use of their common Money) lie waste, and are more than the People, who dwell on it, do, or can make use of, and so still lie in common. Tho' this can scarce happen amongst that part of Mankind, that have consented to the Use of Money.

46. The greatest part of things really useful to the Life of Man, and such as the necessity of subsisting made the first Commoners of § 45 Beginning of the argument promised in II, § 36, 39-40, continued until § 51;

compare II, § 184.

20-2 It is all mankind, not a particular collection or society, which consents to the use of money, that is precious metals. Locke had stated this in his first writing on money (see note on § 46, 5-7), but this fact is used somewhat obscurely in this paragraph to relate the origin of the property of individuals in objects and the land with the ownership of areas of the earth by nations or states. It was traditional to consider these two forms of ownership side by side, for example, in Grotius and Pufendorf.

the World look after, as it doth the Americans now, are generally things of short duration; such as, if they are not consumed by use, will decay and perish of themselves: Gold, Silver, and Diamonds, are things, that Fancy or Agreement hath put the Value on, more than real Use, and the necessary Support of Life. Now of those good things which Nature hath provided in common, every one had a Right (as hath been said) to as much as he could use, and had a Property in all that he could affect with his Labour: all that his Industry could extend to, to alter from the State Nature had put it in, was his. He that gathered a Hundred Bushels of Acorns or Apples, had thereby a Property in them; they were his Goods as soon as gathered. He was only to look that he used them before they spoiled; else he took more than his share, and robb'd others. And indeed it was a foolish thing, as well as dishonest, to hoard up more than he could make use of. If he gave away a part to any body else, so that it perished not uselessly in his Possession, these he also made use of. And if he also bartered away Plumbs that would have rotted in a Week, for Nuts that would last good for his eating a whole Year, he did no injury; he wasted not the common Stock; destroyed no part of the portion of Goods that belonged to others, so long as nothing perished uselessly in his hands. Again, if he would give his Nuts for a piece of Metal, pleased with its colour; or exchange his Sheep for Shells, or Wool for a sparkling Pebble or a Diamond, and keep those by him all his Life, he invaded not the Right of others, he might heap up as much of these durable things as he pleased; the exceeding of the bounds of his just Property not lying in the largeness of his Possession, but the perishing of any thing uselessly in it.

47. And thus came in the use of Money, some lasting thing that Men might keep without spoiling, and that by mutual consent § 46 5-7 Compare II 184, 15-18 and note, and Locke's Considerations of Interest and Money, drafted about 1668, published in 1692 (see Introduction, 29 and note). 'For mankind, having consented to put an imaginary value upon gold and silver, by reason of their durableness, scarcity, and not being very liable to be counterfeited, have made them, by general consent, the common pledges.' It is universal consent, world-wide, for foreigners are insisted on (Works, 1801, v, 22). There is some resemblance between Locke's account of the origin and functions of money and that of Matthew Wren, Monarchy Asserted, 1660, see p. 22 on. Locke owned this book (H. and L. 3188).

§47 Compare Considerations: Money has a value, as it is capable, by exchange, to procure us the necessities, or conveniences of life, and in this it has the nature of a commodity' (1801, 5, 34).

Men would take in exchange for the truly useful, but perishable Supports of Life.

48. And as different degrees of Industry were apt to give Men Possessions in different Proportions, so this Invention of Money gave them the opportunity to continue and enlarge them. For supposing an Island, separate from all possible Commerce with the rest of the World, wherein there were but a hundred Families, but there were Sheep, Horses and Cows, with other useful Animals, wholesome Fruits, and Land enough for Corn for a hundred thousand times as many, but nothing in the Island, either because of its Commonness, or Perishableness, fit to supply the place of Money: What reason could any one have there to enlarge his Possessions beyond the use of his Family, and a plentiful supply to its Consumption, either in what their own Industry produced, or they could barter for like perishable, useful Commodities, with others? Where there is not something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there Men will not be apt to enlarge their Possessions of Land, were it never so rich, never so free for them to take. For I ask, What would a Man value Ten Thousand, or an Hundred Thousand Acres of excellent Land, ready cultivated, and well stocked too with Cattle, in the middle of the in-land Parts of America, where he had no hopes of Commerce with other Parts of the World, to draw Money to him by the Sale of the Product? It would not be worth the inclosing, and we should see him give up again to the wild Common of Nature, whatever was more than would supply the Conveniencies of Life to be had there for him and his Family.

49. Thus in the beginning all the World was America, and more so than that is now; for no such thing as Money was any where known. Find out something that hath the Use and Value of Money amongst his Neighbours, you shall see the same Man will begin presently to enlarge his Possessions.

50. But since Gold and Silver, being little useful to the Life of Man in proportion to Food, Rayment, and Carriage, has its value only from the consent of Men, whereof Labour yet makes, in great part, the measure, it is plain, that Men have agreed to 5 disproportionate and unequal Possession of the Earth, they having by a tacit and voluntary consent found out a way, how a man may fairly possess more land than he himself can use the product of, by receiving in exchange for the overplus, Gold and Silver, which may be hoarded up without injury to any one, these 10 metalls not spoileing or decaying in the hands of the possessor.

 This partage of things, in an inequality of private possessions, men have made practicable out of the bounds of Societie, and without compact, only by putting a value on gold and silver and tacitly agreeing in the use of Money. For in Governments the 15 Laws regulate the right of property, and the possession of land is determined by positive constitutions.

§ 1. And thus, I think, it is very easie to conceive without any difficulty, how Labour could at first begin a title of Property in the common things of Nature, and how the spending it upon our uses bounded it. So that there could then be no reason of quarrelling 5 about Title, nor any doubt about the largeness of Possession it gave. Right and conveniency went together; for as a Man had a Right to all he could imploy his Labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of. This left no room for Controversie about the Title, nor for Incroach-10 ment on the Right of others; what Portion a Man carved to himself, was easily seen; and it was useless as well as dishonest to carve himself too much, or take more than he needed.

§ 50 4-16 Passage extensively corrected in the Christ's copy, in such a way as to make parts of text in lines 5-9 unintelligible except by comparison with text in 1st Collected edition, 1714, and 4th edition, 1713. The original printed version reads very oddly, containing such phrases as 'the consent of Men have agreed', which has been the subject of some learned commentary—for example, Kendall, 1941, 84. Macpherson, 1962, has some trenchant things to say on this passage as an implied, or overt, justification of capitalist accumulation, see 209-10.

§ 51 Von Leyden compares this paragraph and §§ 31 and 36 with the statements about property in Locke's eighth Essay on the Law of Nature (1954, 204-15).

1-2 This curiously repetitive phrase may also be a result of confusion in Locke's manuscript, here uncorrected.

12 With the end of this paragraph and chapter also ends the section of the 1st edition which could have been involved in the printing difficulties of 1689; compare note on 1, § 167, 10, and Laslett 1952 (iv), 1954 (ii).

please.† By which means every single person became subject, equally with other the meanest Men, to those Laws, which he himself, as part of the Legislative had established: nor could any one, by his own Authority, avoid the force of the Law, when once 30 made, nor by any pretence of Superiority, plead exemption, thereby to License his own, or the Miscarriages of any of his Dependants. No Man in Civil Society can be exempted from the Laws of it.‡ For if any Man may do, what he thinks fit, and there be no Appeal on Earth, for Redress or Security against any harm he shall do;
 35 I ask, Whether he be not perfectly still in the State of Nature, and so can be no part or Member of that Civil Society: unless any one will say, the State of Nature and Civil Society are one and the same thing, which I have never yet found any one so great a Patron of Anarchy as to affirm.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Beginning of Political Societies.

95. MEN being, as has been said, by Nature, all free, equal and independent, no one can be put out of this Estate, and subjected to the Political Power of another, without his own Consent. The only way whereby any one devests himself of his

† At the first, when some certain kind of Regiment was once appointed, it may be that nothing was then farther thought upon for the manner of governing, but all permitted unto their Wisdom and Discretion, which were to Rule, till by experience they found this for all parts very inconvenient, so as the thing which they had devised for a Remedy, did indeed but increase the Sore, which it should have cured. They saw, that to live by one Man's Will, became the cause of all Mens misery. This constrained them to come unto Laws wherein all Men might see their Duty beforehand, and know the Penalties of transgressing them. Hooker's Eccl. Pol. I. 1. Sect. 10.

‡ Civil Law being the Act of the whole Body Politick, doth therefore over-rule each several part of the same Body. Hooker ibid.

32 Reference sign inserted as above: Keble, 314; 1676, 90, one slight variant. Elrington, 1798, contrasts this passage and Locke's appeal to it with II, § 12, 13-19, and complains that it leads too directly to government by the will of the people. It certainly implies that the 'meanest man' (I. 27) has property and so a political personality.

§ 95 Chapter VIII. This chapter clearly formed part of the original critique of Filmer, whose positions are cited and whose language is paraphrased; see notes on Natural Liberty, and puts on the bonds of Civil Society is by agreeing 5 with other Men to joyn and unite into a Community, for their comfortable, safe, and peaceable living one amongst another, in a secure Enjoyment of their Properties, and a greater Security against any that are not of it. This any number of Men may do, because it injures not the Freedom of the rest; they are left as 10 they were in the Liberty of the State of Nature. When any number of Men have so consented to make one Community or Government, they are thereby presently incorporated, and make one Body Politick, wherein the Majority have a Right to act and conclude the rest.

96. For when any number of Men have, by the consent of every individual, made a Community, they have thereby made that Community one Body, with a Power to Act as one Body, which is only by the will and determination of the majority. For that which acts any Community, being only the consent of the indi- 5

§ 95, 9; § 98, 12-14; § 101, 23-5; § 103, 10-19; § 112, 8-12; § 114, 5-8; etc.; compare note on II, § 77, chapter VII. But it seems possible that §§ 100-22 were not written in the original composition, but added a little later, after the composition of the First Treatise, perhaps in the summer of 1681 when he seems to have added the quotations from Hooker (see note on § 111, 8), or even after that. The evidence for this is the fact that § 132 seems to follow on to § 99, and that chapter IX (§§ 123-31) is a still later addition, perhaps of 1689; see note there. There is no evidence to show that any part of this chapter VIII was written in 1689, though it is possible, of course, that these discontinuities came about through a much more radical rearrangement of the text in that year.

§ 95 2 'this Estate'—the third printing, not altered by Locke in the Christ's master-copy, reads 'his Estate': corrected by editor with authority of later editions.

9 'any number of Men may do'—a contradiction of a very characteristic claim of Sir Robert Filmer's (see Laslett, 1949, 16) and it is against Filmer that Locke's arguments about majorities are formulated. Though it invites contrast with Hobbes's famous paragraph on 'The Generation of a Commonwealth' (Leviathan, chapter 17, 1904, 118-19), Filmer, not Hobbes, was in Locke's mind. Elrington (1798) objects to this that it is not a question of what men may do, but what they are 'under a direct obligation', moral obligation, to do, and to Locke's statement about majorities (line 15) that the numerical reasoning is fanciful; he makes power the foundation of right.

11-14 For an exhaustive discussion of this passage, which he calls the most concise of all statements of 'the faith of majority-rule democrats', see Kendall, 1941, chapter VII.

§ 96 The general relationship between Locke's views and those of George Lawson is well brought out by the similar content, but quite different demonstration, of their attitude to the majority principle. In his Examination of Hobbes, 1657, Lawson says that in all assemblies and societies, the major part concludes and determines the whole, to avoid confusion and dissension, and to preserve order (p. 25). A common source for both their views, and that of Tyrrell, could well have been the very well known discussion by Grotius, De Jure Belli, Prolegomena (1712, p. x), and II, v, 17.

viduals of it, and it being necessary to that which is one body to move one way; it is necessary the Body should move that way whither the greater force carries it, which is the consent of the majority: or else it is impossible it should act or continue one 10 Body, one Community, which the consent of every individual that united into it, agreed that it should; and so every one is bound by that consent to be concluded by the majority. And therefore we see that in Assemblies impowered to act by positive Laws where no number is set by that positive Law which impowers
 15 them, the act of the Majority passes for the act of the whole, and of course determines, as having by the Law of Nature and Reason, the power of the whole.

97. And thus every Man, by consenting with others to make one Body Politick under one Government, puts himself under an Obligation to every one of that Society, to submit to the determination of the majority, and to be concluded by it; or else this 5 original Compact, whereby he with others incorporates into one Society, would signifie nothing, and be no Compact, if he be left free, and under no other ties, than he was in before in the State of Nature. For what appearance would there be of any Compact? What new Engagement if he were no farther tied by any Decrees
 10 of the Society, than he himself thought fit, and did actually consent to? This would be still as great a liberty, as he himself had before his Compact, or any one else in the State of Nature hath, who may submit himself and consent to any acts of it if he thinks fit.

98. For if the consent of the majority shall not in reason, be received, as the act of the whole, and conclude every individual; nothing but the consent of every individual can make any thing to be the act of the whole: But such a consent is next impossible
 5 ever to be had, if we consider the Infirmities of Health, and Avocations of Business, which in a number, though much less than that of a Common-wealth, will necessarily keep many away from the publick Assembly. To which if we add the variety of § 97 The effect, if not the sense and phraseology, of this paragraph is very close to that of Hobbes, Leviathan, chapter 18, headed No man can without injustice protest against the Institution of the Sovereigne declared by the major part (1904, 122). See note on II, § 98, 12-14.

§ 98 This paragraph was extensively modified by Locke in the Christ's copy, though not in such a way as to alter the sense.

Opinions, and contrariety of Interests, which unavoidably happen in all Collections of Men, the coming into Society upon such terms, would be only like Cato's coming into the Theatre, only to go out again. Such a Constitution as this would make the mighty Leviathan of a shorter duration, than the feeblest Creatures; and not let it outlast the day it was born in: which cannot be suppos'd, till we can think, that Rational Creatures should desire and constitute Societies only to be dissolved. For where the majority cannot conclude the rest, there they cannot act as one Body, and consequently will be immediately dissolved again.

99. Whosoever therefore out of a state of Nature unite into a Community, must be understood to give up all the power, necessary to the ends for which they unite into Society, to the majority of the Community, unless they expressly agreed in any number greater than the majority. And this is done by barely agreeing to unite into one Political Society, which is all the Compact that is, or needs be, between the Individuals, that enter into, or make up a Common-wealth. And thus that, which begins and actually constitutes any Political Society, is nothing but the consent of any number of Freemen capable of a majority to unite and incorporate into such a Society. And this is that, and that only, which did, or could give beginning to any lawful Government in the World.

100. To this I find two Objections made.

First, That there are no Instances to be found in Story of a Company of Men independent and equal one amongst another, that met together, and in this way began and set up a Government.

11 Martial, Epigrammaton, 1, Praef.:

'Cur in theatrum, Cato severe, venisti,
An ideo tantum veneras, ut exires?'

A common anecdote about Cato of Utica; information from Mr E. J. Kenney.

12-14 A deliberate invocation of the language of Hobbes, clearly sarcastic and not intended as a critical comment on the theory of Leviathan, nor on any particular passage in it; see Introduction, 71. Locke and Hobbes were agreed on the necessity of the consent of the majority being taken for the act of the whole, and it was Filmer who denied it; see passages cited in note on 11, § 95, 9. His defence of the majority principle against Filmer must be pronounced unsatisfactory, for he responded to the challenge to prove 'by some law of nature that the major part have the power to rule over the rest of the multitude' (Filmer, 82) by simply asserting that it is 'by the Law of Nature and Reason' (11, § 96, 16); compare Allen, 1928.

§ 100 It is possible that the paragraphs from this point to 11, § 131, were added after the original composition, perhaps in 1681, for § 132 seems to follow on to § 99. See note on 11, §§ 95 (ch. viii); 101; 111, 18; 123 (ch. ix); 132 (ch. x).

- 5 Secondly, 'Tis impossible of right that Men should do so, because all Men being born under Government, they are to submit to that, and are not at liberty to begin a new one.

101. To the first there is this to Answer. That it is not at all to be wonder'd, that History gives us but a very little account of Men, that lived together in the State of Nature. The inconveniencies of that condition, and the love, and want of Society no sooner
 5 brought any number of them together, but they presently united and incorporated, if they designed to continue together. And if we may not suppose Men ever to have been in the State of Nature, because we hear not much of them in such a State, we may as well suppose the Armies of Salmanasser, or Xerxes were never 10 Children, because we hear little of them, till they were Men, and imbodyed in Armies. Government is every where antecedent to Records, and Letters seldom come in amongst a People, till a long continuation of Civil Society has, by other more necessary Arts provided for their Safety, Ease, and Plenty. And then they 15 begin to look after the History of their Founders, and search into their original, when they have out-lived the memory of it. For 'tis with Common-wealths as with particular Persons, they are commonly ignorant of their own Births and Infancies: And if they know any thing of their Original, they are beholding, for it, to 20 the accidental Records, that others have kept of it. And those that we have, of the beginning of any Politics in the World, excepting that of the Jews, where God himself immediately interpos'd, and which favours not at all Paternal Dominion, are all either plain instances of such a beginning, as I have mentioned, 25 or at least have manifest footsteps of it.

102. He must shew a strange inclination to deny evident matter of fact, when it agrees not with his Hypothesis, who will

5-7 See II, § 112, 18-19. Both the obvious objections registered here occur in Filmer, for example, 81 and 232.

§ 101 This paragraph begins the fuller answer about the actual existence of a state of nature preceding the establishment of civil societies, hinted at in II, § 14, 1-3. It seems possible that in 1681 Locke decided to elaborate his argument on this point, and that this was why he extended his text here—see note on II, § 100 and references.

9 'Salmanasser'—the Assyrian conqueror (ninth century B.C.); 'Xerxes'—the Persian conqueror (defeated at Salamis 480 B.C.).

11-12 Compare I, § 144, 31-2 and I, § 145, 7.

23-5 These phrases show that Locke has Filmer in mind, and 'manifest footsteps' is Filmer's own expression (60) ridiculed in I, § 150.

not allow that the beginning of Rome and Venice were by the uniting together of several Men free and independent one of another, amongst whom there was no natural Superiority or Subjection. And if Josephus Acosta's word may be taken, he tells us, that in many parts of America there was no Government at all. There are great and apparent Conjectures, says he, that these Men, speaking of those of Peru, for a long time had neither Kings nor Common-wealths, but lived in Troops, as they do this day in Florida, 10 the Cheriquanas, those of Bresil, and many other Nations, which have no certain Kings, but as occasion is offered in Peace or War, they choose their Captains as they please, l. 1. c. 25. If it be said, that every Man there was born subject to his Father, or the head of his Family. That the subjection due from a Child to a Father, took not away 15 his freedom of uniting into what Political Society he thought fit, has been already proved. But be that as it will, these Men, 'tis evident, were actually free; and whatever superiority some Politicians now would place in any of them, they themselves claimed it not; but by consent were all equal, till by the same consent they 20 set Rulers over themselves. So that their Politick Societies all began from a voluntary Union, and the mutual agreement of Men freely acting in the choice of their Governours, and forms of Government.

103. And I hope those who went away from Sparta with Palantus, mentioned by Justin l. 3. c. 4 will be allowed to have been Freemen independent one of another, and to have set up a Government over themselves, by their own consent. Thus I have given several Examples out of History, of People free and in the State of 5 Nature, that being met together incorporated and began a Common-wealth. And if the want of such instances be an argument to prove

6-14 A citation from Edward Grimestone's translation of Acosta, The naturall and morall historie of the Indies, 1604, a popular book with Locke, and by his side in 1681. The passage is found on 1, 72 of the 1880 reprint. The Cheriquanas are spelt with a 'g' in the original: 'a wild tribe in forests to the east of the Andes'.

14 A reminiscence of Filmer; see passage quoted in note to II, § 114, 5-8.

§ 103 2 Palantus was the leader of the Spartans who founded the city of Tarentum in Italy in the eighth century B.C. The account given by Trogus Pompeius is known only from the epitome of his universal history made by Justin in the second or third century A.D. The reference here is probably to the Paris edition of 1543.

that Government were not, nor could not be so begun, I suppose the Contenders for Paternal Empire were better let it alone, than 10 urge it against natural Liberty. For if they can give so many instances out of History, of Governments begun upon Paternal Right, I think (though at best an Argument from what has been, to what should of right be, has no great force) one might, without 15 any great danger, yield them the cause. But if I might advise them in the Case, they would do well not to search too much into the Original of Governments, as they have begun de facto, lest they should find at the foundation of most of them, something very little favourable to the design they promote, and such a power as 20 they contend for.

104. But to conclude, Reason being plain on our side, that Men are naturally free, and the Examples of History shewing, that the Governments of the World, that were begun in Peace, had their beginning laid on that foundation, and were made by 5 the Consent of the People; There can be little room for doubt, either where the Right is, or what has been the Opinion, or Practice of Mankind, about the first erecting of Governments.

105. I will not deny, that if we look back as far as History will direct us, towards the Original of Common-wealths, we shall generally find them under the Government and Administration of one Man. And I am also apt to believe, that where a Family was numerous 5 enough to subsist by it self, and continued entire together, without mixing with others, as it often happens, where there is much Land and few People, the Government commonly began in the Father. For the Father having, by the Law of Nature, the same Power with every Man else to punish, as he thought fit, any Offences 10 against that Law, might thereby punish his transgressing Children even when they were Men, and out of their Pupilage; and they § 104 3 On the limitation to governments begun in peace, see II, § 112, 140.

§ 105 With this paragraph begins a passage continuing to II, § 112 which repeats and extends Locke's concessions to patriarchalism; compare II, § 74, 14-37 and note. Again his argument is close to that of Tyrrell (for example, 1681, 83 on) and perhaps even closer to Pufendorf—see De Jure Naturae, 1672, VII, i, entitled De Causa Impulsiva Instituendae Civitatis, especially § 5. He follows Edward Gee, Filmer's first critic (1658, p. 150), in these comments on Filmer's patriarchalism.

were very likely to submit to his punishment, and all joyn with him against the Offender, in their turns, giving him thereby power to Execute his Sentence against any transgression, and so in effect make him the Law-maker, and Governour over all, that remained 15 in Conjunction with his Family. He was fittest to be trusted; Paternal affection secured their Property, and Interest under his Care, and the Custom of obeying him, in their Childhood, made it easier to submit to him, rather than to any other. If therefore they must have one to rule them, as Government is hardly to be 20 avoided amongst Men that live together; who so likely to be the Man, as he that was their common Father; unless Negligence, Cruelty, or any other defect of Mind, or Body made him unfit for it? But when either the Father died, and left his next Heir for want of Age, Wisdom, Courage, or any other Qualities, less 25 fit for Rule: or where several Families met, and consented to continue together: There, 'tis not to be doubted, but they used their natural freedom, to set up him, whom they judged the ablest, and most likely, to Rule well over them. Conformable hereunto we find the People of America, who (living out of the reach of 30 the Conquering Swords, and spreading domination of the two great Empires of Peru and Mexico) enjoy'd their own natural freedom, though, cæteris paribus, they commonly prefer the Heir of their deceased King; yet if they find him any way weak, or incapable, they pass him by and set up the stoutest and bravest 35 Man for their Ruler.

106. Thus, though looking back as far as Records give us any account of Peopling the World, and the History of Nations, we commonly find the Government to be in one hand, yet it destroys not that, which I affirm, (viz.) That the beginning of Politick Society depends upon the consent of the Individuals, to 5 joyn into and make one Society; who, when they are thus incorporated, might set up what form of Government they thought fit. But this having given occasion to Men to mistake, and think, that by Nature Government was Monarchical, and belong'd to the Father, it may not be amiss here to consider, why People in 10 the beginning generally pitch'd upon this form, which though

16 Elrington (1798) comments here that men had a duty to trust the heads of families and no arbitrary right to reject them, and on II, § 106 that Locke does not maintain that men have an arbitrary right over their most important moral actions.

perhaps the Father's Preheminency might in the first institution of some Common-wealths, give a rise to, and place, in the beginning, the Power in one hand; Yet it is plain, that the reason, 15 that continued the Form of Government in a single Person, was not any Regard, or Respect to Paternal Authority; since all petty Monarchies, that is, almost all Monarchies, near their Original, have been commonly, at least upon occasion, Elective.

107. First then, in the beginning of things, the Father's Government of the Childhood of those sprung from him, having accustomed them to the Rule of one Man, and taught them that where it was exercised with Care and Skill, with Affection and 5 Love to those under it, it was sufficient to procure and preserve to Men all the Political Happiness they sought for, in Society. It was no wonder, that they should pitch upon, and naturally run into that Form of Government, which from their Infancy they had been all accustomed to; and which, by experience they 10 had found both easie and safe. To which, if we add, that Monarchy being simple, and most obvious to Men, whom neither experience had instructed in Forms of Government, nor the Ambition or Insolence of Empire had taught to beware of the Encroachments of Prerogative, or the Inconveniencies of Absolute Power, which 15 Monarchy, in Succession, was apt to lay claim to, and bring upon them, it was not at all strange, that they should not much trouble themselves to think of Methods of restraining any Exorbitances of those, to whom they had given the Authority over them, and of ballancing the Power of Government, by placing several parts 20 of it in different hands. They had neither felt the Oppression of Tyrannical Dominion, nor did the Fashion of the Age, nor their Possessions, or way of living (which afforded little matter for Covetousness or Ambition) give them any reason to apprehend or provide against it: and therefore 'tis no wonder they put them-
 25 selves into such a Frame of Government, as was not only as I said, § 106 16-18 Compare II, § 132, 10-12. In his journal under 25 March 1679 (compare Introduction, 34) and under the heading Politia, Locke quotes from Sagard's Canada (1636: compare II, § 58 note) on the elective kingship of that region, which nevertheless usually permits the son to succeed to the father's throne. 'Their kings are rather obliged by consent and persuasion than compulsion, the public good being the reason of their authority . . . and this seems to be the state of regal authority in its original in all that part of the world', he writes, and initials the note (B.M. Add. MSS. 15642).

most obvious and simple, but also best suited to their present State and Condition; which stood more in need of defence against foreign Invasions and Injuries, than of multiplicity of Laws. The equality of a simple poor way of liveing confining their desires within the narrow bounds of each mans smal propertie made few controversies and so no need of many laws to decide them: And there wanted not of Justice where there were but few Trespasses, and few Offenders. Since then those, who liked one another so well as to joyn into Society, cannot but be supposed to have some Acquaintance and Friendship together, and some Trust one in another; they could not but have greater Apprehensions of others, than of one another: And therefore their first care and thought cannot but be supposed to be, how to secure themselves against foreign Force. 'Twas natural for them to put themselves under a Frame of Government, which might best serve to that end; and chuse the wisest and bravest Man to conduct them in their Wars, and lead them out against their Enemies, and in this chiefly be their Ruler.

108. Thus we see, that the Kings of the Indians in America, which is still a Pattern of the first Ages in Asia and Europe, whilst the Inhabitants were too few for the Country, and want of People and Money gave Men no Temptation to enlarge their Possessions of Land, or contest for wider extent of Ground, are little more than Generals of their Armies; and though they command absolutely § 107 28-32 Rewritten by Locke in the Christ's copy, but differences immaterial. The text is considerably modified in minute detail in this area, almost entirely for punctuation.

§ 108 1-2 Compare II, § 49, 1.

6 'Generals of their Armies'—Locke shared with Tyrrell the view that a frequent origin of kingship was in the military leader, and that the dominance of such a leader may be a transitional stage between the state of nature and of society. See Tyrrell, 1681, 85 (the early kings of the Goths, Vandals, and 'our Saxons') and 92-3, referring to the 'Caciques', of the Caribbean Islands and Brazil. Indeed Tyrrell actually made a note on the point in Locke's journal for 1680, about the King amongst the inhabitants of the Hudson Bay area, who was 'only captain of so many families'. Acosta and Lery were probably their other sources, but the most straightforward statement is to be found in the Histoire naturelle et Morale des Iles Antilles (H. and L. 2491a, probably by Rocheford, but also attributed to Du Tertre and De Poincy), Rotterdam, 1658, which Locke possessed. The discussion in Grotius, 1625, I, iii, 8, may be compared and contrasted.

The argument is repeated in the Letters on Toleration: 'There are nations in the West Indies, which have no other end of their society but their mutual defence against their common enemies. In these their captain, or prince, is sovereign commander in time in War, yet at home and in time of Peace they exercise very little Dominion, and have but a very moderate Sovereignty, the Resolutions of Peace and War, being ordinarily either in the People, or 10 in a Council. Though the War it self, which admits not of Plurality of Governours, naturally devolves the Command into the King's sole Authority.

109. And thus in Israel it self, the chief Business of their Judges, and first Kings seems to have been to be Captains in War, and Leaders of their Armies; which, (besides what is signified by going out and in before the People, which was, to march forth to War, and 5 home again in the Heads of their Forces) appears plainly in the Story of Jephtha. The Ammonites making War upon Israel, the Gileadites, in fear send to Jephtha, a Bastard of their Family, whom they had cast off, and article with him, if he will assist them against the Ammonites, to make him their Ruler; which they do
 10 in these words, And the People made him head and captain over them, Judg. 11. 11. which was, as it seems, all one as to be Judge. And he judged Israel, Judg. 12. 7. that is, was their Captain-General, six Years. So when Jotham upbraids the Shechemites with the Obligation they had to Gideon, who had been their Judge and 15 Ruler, he tells them, He fought for you, and adventured his life far, and delivered you out of the hands of Midian, Judg. 9. 17. Nothing mentioned of him, but what he did as a General, and indeed that of war; but in time of peace, neither he nor any body else has any authority over any of the society' (Second Letter, 1690, Works, 1801, VI, 121). 'Let me ask you, Whether it be not possible that men, to whom the rivers and woods afforded the spontaneous provisions of life, and so with no private possessions of land, had no enlarged desires after riches or power, should live in one society, make one people of one language under one Chieftain, who shall have no other power to command them in time of common war against their common enemies, without any municipal laws, judges, or any person with superiority established amongst them, but ended all their private differences, if any arose, by the extemporary determination of their neighbours, or of arbitrators chosen by the parties. I ask you, whether in such a commonwealth, the Chieftain, who was the only man of authority amongst them, had any power to use the force of the commonwealth to any other end but the defence of it against an enemy, though other benefits were attainable by it?' (Third Letter, 1692, Works, 1801, VI, 223). This second passage, written in vindication of the first, is a most interesting exposition of Locke's views on the state of nature, or of such a state mixed with a state of society. Compare Seliger, 1968, p. 870.

§ 109 This assimilation of biblical history with the history of primitive peoples is characteristically Lockean; compare I, § 158, 5-7, and see II, § 36, 9-25 and references.

3-4 'going out and in before the People'—a common Old Testament phrase for leading the Israelites to war; see, for example, Numbers xxvii. 17.

is all is found in his History, or in any of the rest of the Judges. And Abimelech particularly is called King, though at most he was but their General. And when, being weary of the ill Conduct 20 of Samuel's Sons, the Children of Israel desired a King, like all the nations to judge them, and to go out before them, and to fight their battels, 1 Sam. 8. 20. God granting their Desire, says to Samuel, I will send thee a Man, and thou shalt anoint him to be Captain over my People Israel, that he may save my People out of the hands of the 25 Philistines, c. 9. v. 16. As if the only business of a King had been to lead out their Armies, and fight in their Defence; and accordingly at his Inauguration, pouring a Vial of Oyl upon him, declares to Saul, that the Lord had anointed him to be Captain over his inheritance, c. 10. v. 1. And therefore those, who after Saul's being solemnly 30 chosen and saluted King by the Tribes at Mispah, were unwilling to have him their King, make no other Objection but this, How shall this Man save us? v. 27. as if they should have said, This Man is unfit to be our King, not having Skill and Conduct enough in War, to be able to defend us. And when God resolved to transfer 35 the Government to David, it is in these Words, But now thy Kingdom shall not continue: The Lord hath sought him a Man after his own heart, and the Lord hath commanded him to be Captain over his People, c. 13. v. 14. As if the whole Kingly Authority were nothing else but to be their General: And therefore the Tribes who had 40 stuck to Saul's Family, and opposed David's Reign, when they came to Hebron with terms of Submission to him, they tell him, amongst other Arguments they had to submit to him as to their King, That he was in effect their King in Saul's time, and therefore they had no reason but to receive him as their King now. Also 45 (say they) in time past, when Saul was King over us, thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel, and the Lord said unto thee, thou shalt feed my People Israel, and thou shalt be a Captain over Israel.

110. Thus, whether a Family by degrees grew up into a Commonwealth, and the Fatherly Authority being continued on to the elder Son, every one in his turn growing up under it, tacitly submitted to it, and the easiness and equality of it not offending 5 any one, every one acquiesced, till time seemed to have confirmed it, and settled a right of Succession by Prescription: or whether several Families, or the Descendants of several Families, whom

Chance, Neighbourhood, or Business brought together, uniting into Society, the need of a General, whose Conduct might defend 10 them against their Enemies in War, and the great confidence the Innocence and Sincerity of that poor but vertuous Age (such as are almost all those which begin Governments, that ever come to last in the World) gave Men one of another, made the first
 15 Beginners of Common-wealths generally put the Rule into one Man's hand, without any other express Limitation or Restraint, but what the Nature of the thing, and the End of Government required: which ever of these it was, that at first put the rule into the hands of a single person, certain it is that no body was ever 20 intrusted with it but for the publick Good and Safety, and to those Ends in the Infancies of Commonwealths those who had it, commonly used it: And unless they had done so, young Societies could not have subsisted: without such nursing Fathers tender and carefull of the publick weale, all Governments would have sunk under the Weakness and Infirmities of their Infancy; and 25 the Prince and the People had soon perished together.

III. But though the Golden Age (before vain Ambition, and amor sceleratus habendi, evil Concupiscence, had corrupted Mens minds into a Mistake of true Power and Honour) had more Virtue, and consequently better Governours, as well as less § 110 17-23 Modified and partially rewritten in the Christ's copy. On 'nursing Fathers' and his other quasi-patriarchal statements compare II, § 105, note and references.

19-20 For Locke's doctrine of trust, see Introduction, 113 on, and compare in this passage in particular the early words of his Essay Concerning Toleration of 1667: 'The whole trust, power and authority of the magistrate is vested in him for no other purpose, but to be made use of for the good, preservation, and peace of men in that society over which he is set, and therefore this ought to be the standard and measure, according to which he ought to square and proportion his laws, model and frame his government' (Fox Bourne, 1876, I, 174).

§ III 2 The Latin tag is from Ovid, Metamorphoses, I, 131. This hint of a golden age is a highly traditional element, and is usually assumed to be a description of Locke's state of nature; see Leslie Stephen, 1876 (1902), II, 137, followed, for example, by Strauss, 1953, 216. If this is the intention it is in sharp contrast with the Hobbesian view of the state of nature, though, as Strauss points out, rather difficult to reconcile with Locke's own account of the Fall, for example, I, §§ 44, 45. Lamprecht, 1918, 127, however, takes the view that it refers not to the state of nature but to the early, virtuous years of established government. As always, Locke's language is inexact, but a close and sympathetic reading of this paragraph and II, §§ 107, 110 seems to confirm this as the correct view.

the one side to oppress the People; nor consequently on the other any Dispute about Priviledge, to lessen or restrain the Power of the Magistrate;† and so no contest betwixt Rulers and People about Governours or Government: Yet, when Ambition and Luxury, in future Ages would retain and increase the Power, without doing the Business, for which it was given, and aided by Flattery, taught Princes to have distinct and separate Interests from their People, Men found it necessary to examine more carefully the Original and Rights of Government; and to find out ways to restrain the Exorbitances, and prevent the Abuses of that Power which they having intrusted in another's hands only for their own good, they found was made use of to hurt them.

112. Thus we may see how probable it is, that People that were naturally free, and by their own consent either submitted to the Government of their Father, or united together, out of different Families to make a Government, should generally put the Rule into one Man's hands, and chuse to be under the Conduct of a single Person, without so much as by express Conditions limiting or regulating his Power, which they thought safe enough in his Honesty and Prudence. Though they never dream'd of Monarchy being Jure Divino, which we never heard of among Mankind, till it was revealed to us by the Divinity of this last Age; nor ever allowed Paternal Power to have a right to Dominion,

† At first, when some certain kind of Regiment was once approved, it may be nothing was then further thought upon for the manner of governing, but all permitted unto their Wisdom and Discretion which were to Rule, till by experience they found this for all parts very inconvenient, so as the thing which they had devised for a Remedy, did indeed but increase the Sore which it should have cured. They saw, that to live by one Man's Will, became the cause of all Mens misery. This constrained them to come unto Laws wherein all Men might see their Duty before-hand, and know the Penalties of transgressing them. Hooker's Eccl. Pol. L. 1. Sect. 10.

8 Reference sign for Hooker quotation inserted by editor; see note on II, § 74, 15. This quotation is also used to illustrate II, § 94, 26; see note there. Its reappearance here may be due to the fact that §§ 100-31 were added after the original composition (see note on II, § 95 (chapter VIII) and references), though it may indicate some confusion in Locke's manuscript, or some misunderstanding by the compositor of the 1st edition not subsequently corrected. The quotation is fairly appropriate in both places; it shows some variants from Hooker's text, including Locke's underlining of a critical phrase, and between the two printings of it.

§ 112 8-12 The 'Divinity of this last Age' was Filmer's patriarchal doctrine, publicly owned by the pulpit and made 'the Currant Divinity of the Times'; see the Preface, 32-3. It is possible that lines 8-17 here were an addition of 1689.

or to be the Foundation of all Government. And thus much may suffice to shew, that as far as we have any light from History, we have reason to conclude, that all peaceful beginnings of 15 Government have been laid in the Consent of the People. I say peaceful, because I shall have occasion in another place to speak of Conquest, which some esteem a way of beginning of Governments.

The other Objection I find urged against the beginning of Politics, in the way I have mentioned, is this, viz.

113. That all Men being born under Government, some or other, it is impossible any of them should ever be free, and at liberty to unite together, and begin a new one, or ever be able to erect a lawful Government.

If this Argument be good; I ask, how came so many lawful 5 Monarchies into the World? For if any body, upon this supposition, can shew me any one Man in any Age of the World free to begin a lawful Monarchy; I will be bound to shew him Ten other free Men at Liberty, at the same time to unite and begin a new Government under a Regal, or any other Form. It being 10 demonstration, that if any one, born under the Dominion of another, may be so free as to have a right to command others in a new and distinct Empire; every one that is born under the Dominion of another may be so free too, and may become a Ruler, or Subject, of a distinct separate Government. And so by this their own Principle, either 15 all Men, however born, are free, or else there is but one lawful Prince, one lawful Government in the World. And then they have nothing to do but barely to shew us, which that is. Which when they have done, I doubt not but all Mankind will easily agree to pay Obedience to him.

114. Though it be a sufficient Answer to their Objection to shew, that it involves them in the same difficulties that it doth those they use it against; yet I shall endeavour to discover the weakness of this Argument a little farther.

5 All Men, say they, are born under Government, and therefore they

14-15 Compare II § 104, 3.

15-17 The other place is Chapter XVI II §§ 175-198.

18-19 See II, § 100, 5-7: these two lines were obviously intended to stand out of the paragraph numeration, hence the odd beginning of § 113.

§ 113 1-5 Compare note on II, § 100. This objection is not found stated in such a general form by Filmer, but it is a position consistently implied by him; see especially his Forms (Laslett, 1949, 185-229).

§ 114 5-8 A paraphrase of Filmer (Laslett's edition, 232): 'Every man that is born, is so far from being free-born, that by his very birth he becomes a subject to cannot be at liberty to begin a new one. Every one is born a Subject to his Father, or his Prince, and is therefore under the perpetual tie of Subjection and Allegiance. 'Tis plain Mankind never owned nor considered any such natural subjection, that they were born in, to one or to the other, that tied them, without their own Consents, to 10 a Subjection to them and their Heirs.

115. For there are no Examples so frequent in History, both Sacred and Prophane, as those of Men withdrawing themselves, and their Obedience, from the Jurisdiction they were born under, and the Family or Community they were bred up in, and setting up new Governments in other places; from whence sprang all that 5 number of petty Common-wealths in the beginning of Ages, and which always multiplyed, as long as there was room enough, till the stronger, or more fortunate swallowed the weaker; and those great ones again breaking to pieces, dissolved into lesser Dominions. All which are so many Testimonies against Paternal 10 Sovereignty, and plainly prove, That it was not the natural right of the Father descending to his Heirs, that made Governments in the beginning, since it was impossible, upon that ground, there should have been so many little Kingdoms; all must have been but only one Universal Monarchy, if Men had not been at liberty to 15 separate themselves from their Families, and the Government, be it what it will, that was set up in it, and go and make distinct Common-wealths and other Governments, as they thought fit.

116. This has been the practice of the World from its first beginning to this day: Nor is it now any more hindrance to the freedom of Mankind, that they are born under constituted and ancient Polities, that have established Laws and set Forms of Government, than if they were born in the Woods, amongst the unconfined 5 Inhabitants that ran loose in them. For those who would perswade us, that by being born under any Government, we are naturally Subjects to it, and have no more any title or pretence to the freedom of the State of Nature, have no other reason (bating that of Paternal him that begets him: under which subjection, he is always to live, unless by immediate appointment from God, or by the grant or death of his Father, he become possessed of that power to which he was subject', ridiculed in the First Treatise; compare II, § 102, 14.

§ 116 9–10 This parenthesis demonstrates that Locke is still arguing against Filmer (compare § 115, 10–11): 'already answer'd' seems to refer to the text immediately preceding, rather than to the First Treatise.

- 10 Power, which we have already answer'd) to produce for it, but only because our Fathers or Progenitors passed away their natural Liberty, and thereby bound up themselves and their Posterity to a perpetual subjection to the Government, which they themselves submitted to. 'Tis true, that whatever Engagements or 15 Promises any one has made for himself, he is under the Obligation of them, but cannot by any Compact whatsoever, bind his Children or Posterity. For this Son, when a Man, being altogether as free as the Father, any act of the Father can no more give away the liberty of the Son, than it can of any body else: He may indeed annex such 20 Conditions to the Land, he enjoyed as a Subject of any Commonwealth, as may oblige his Son to be of that Community, if he will enjoy those Possessions which were his Fathers; because that Estate being his Fathers Property, he may dispose or settle it as he pleases.

117. And this has generally given the occasion to mistake in this matter; because Commonwealths not permitting any part of their Dominions to be dismembred, nor to be enjoyed by any but those of their Community, the Son cannot ordinarily enjoy the 5 Possessions of his Father, but under the same terms his Father did; by becoming a Member of the Society: whereby he puts himself presently under the Government, he finds there established, as much as any other Subject of that Commonwealth. And thus the Consent of Free-men, born under Government, which only makes 10 them Members of it, being given separately in their turns, as each comes to be of Age, and not in a multitude together; People take no notice of it, and thinking it not done at all, or not necessary, conclude they are naturally Subjects as they are Men.

118. But, 'tis plain, Governments themselves understand it otherwise; they claim no Power over the Son, because of that they had over the Father; nor look on Children as being their Subjects, by their Fathers being so. If a Subject of England have a Child by an 5 English Woman in France, whose Subject is he? Not the King of § 118 Leslie Stephen comments that this paragraph 'leads straight to anarchy', 1902, II, 140. I am indebted to Mr Parry, of Downing College, Cambridge, in the following notes.

4-5 In Locke's day, as in our own, a child of British subjects born in France was a British citizen, under the statute De natis ultra mare of 25 Edward III, and it was decided by a case of 1627 that either father or mother would suffice.

England's; for he must have leave to be admitted to the Priviledges of it. Nor the King of France's; For how then has his Father a liberty to bring him away, and breed him as he pleases? And who ever was judged as a Traytor or Deserter, if he left, or warr'd against a Country, for being barely born in it of Parents that were Aliens there? 'Tis plain then, by the Practice of Governments themselves, as well as by the Law of right Reason, that a Child is born a Subject of no Country or Government. He is under his Fathers Tuition and Authority, till he come to Age of Discretion; and then he is a Free-man, at liberty what Government he will put himself under; what Body Politick he will unite himself to. For if an English-Man's Son, born in France, be at liberty, and may do so, 'tis evident there is no Tye upon him by his Father being a Subject of this Kingdom; nor is he bound up, by any Compact of his Ancestors. And why then hath not his Son, by the same reason, the same liberty, though he be born any where else? Since the Power that a Father hath naturally over his Children, is the same, where-ever they be born; and the Tyes of Natural Obligations, are not bounded by the positive Limits of Kingdoms and Common-wealths.

119. Every Man being, as has been shewed, naturally free, and nothing being able to put him into subjection to any Earthly Power, but only his own Consent; it is to be considered, what shall be understood to be a sufficient Declaration of a Mans Consent, to make him subject to the Laws of any Government. There is a common distinction of an express and a tacit consent, which will concern our present Case. No body doubts but an express Consent, of any Man, entring into any Society, makes him a perfect Member of that Society, a Subject of that Government. The difficulty is, what ought to be look'd upon as a tacit Consent, and how far it binds, i.e. how far any one shall be looked on to have

7 This does not seem to have been a general rule, but there were cases of foreign-born children of British parents being formally naturalized in the seventeenth century; see Parry, 1954.

11-13 Pollock comments that this is an 'opinion which no modern lawyer will accept, least of all a continental one', 1904, 244. Since, however, there was no right to nationality in the law of Locke's day, he is not necessarily wrong in what he says. He was strongly in favour of the naturalization of aliens on social and economic grounds; see Laslett, 1957 (i), 393.

§ 119 7-9 The Fundamental Constitutions of Carolina, Articles 117-18, make provision for just such an express declaration, but Seliger, 1968, p. 276, denies the relevance of this.

consented, and thereby submitted to any Government, where he has made no Expressions of it at all. And to this I say, that every Man, that hath any Possession, or Enjoyment, of any part of the 15 Dominions of any Government, doth thereby give his tacit Consent, and is as far forth obliged to Obedience to the Laws of that Government, during such Enjoyment, as any one under it; whether this his Possession be of Land, to him and his Heirs for ever, or a Lodging only for a Week; or whether it be barely 20 travelling freely on the Highway; and in Effect, it reaches as far as the very being of any one within the Territories of that Government.

120. To understand this the better, it is fit to consider, that every Man, when he, at first, incorporates himself into any Commonwealth, he, by his uniting himself thereunto, annexed also, and submits to the Community those Possessions, which he
 5 has, or shall acquire, that do not already belong to any other Government. For it would be a direct Contradiction, for any one, to enter into Society with others for the securing and regulating of Property: And yet to suppose his Land, whose Property is to be regulated by the Laws of the Society, should be exempt from 10 the Jurisdiction of that Government, to which he himself the Proprietor of the Land, is a Subject. By the same Act therefore, whereby any one unites his Person, which was before free, to any Commonwealth; by the same he unites his Possessions, which were before free, to it also; and they become, both of them,
 15 Person and Possession, subject to the Government and Dominion of that Commonwealth, as long as it hath a being. Whoever therefore, from thenceforth, by Inheritance, Purchase, Permission, or otherways enjoys any part of the Land, so annexed to, and under the Government of that Commonwealth, must take it with the Condition it 20 is under; that is, of submitting to the Government of the Commonwealth, under whose Jurisdiction it is, as far forth, as any Subject of it.

§ 120 Kendall infers from this passage that society vouchsafes property to the individual. Compare 11, § 139, 4-5 and statements in the works on toleration. Locke's 1st Letter of 1689 implies that the magistrate may 'change propriety among fellow-subjects', and the Essay of 1667 says 'The magistrate having a power to appoint ways of transferring proprieties from one man to another, may establish any, so they be universal, equal and without violence and suited to the welfare of that society' (quoted here from the Huntington MS. The words underlined are omitted in that printed by Fox Bourne (1876, 1, 183)).

121. But since the Government has a direct Jurisdiction only over the Land, and reaches the Possessor of it, (before he has actually incorporated himself in the Society) only as he dwells upon, and enjoys that: The Obligation any one is under, by Virtue of such Enjoyment, to submit to the Government, begins and ends with the Enjoyment; so that whenever the Owner, who has given nothing but such a tacit Consent to the Government, will, by Donation, Sale, or otherwise, quit the said Possession, he is at liberty to go and incorporate himself into any other Commonwealth, or to agree with others to begin a new one, in vacuis locis, in any part of the World, they can find free and unpossessed: Whereas he, that has once, by actual Agreement, and any express Declaration, given his Consent to be of any Commonweal, is perpetually and indispensably obliged to be and remain unalterably a Subject to it, and can never be again in the liberty of the state of Nature; unless by any Calamity, the Government, he was under, comes to be dissolved; or else by some publick Act cuts him off from being any longer a Member of it.

122. But submitting to the Laws of any Country, living quietly, and enjoying Priviledges and Protection under them, makes not a Man a Member of that Society: This is only a local Protection and Homage due to, and from all those, who, not being in a state of War, come within the Territories belonging to any Government, to all parts whereof the force of its Law extends. But this no more makes a Man a Member of that Society, a perpetual Subject of that Commonwealth, than it would make a Man a Subject to another in whose Family he found it convenient to abide for some time; though, whilst he continued in it, he were obliged to comply with the Laws, and submit to the Government he found there. And thus we see, that Foreigners, by living all their Lives under another Government, and enjoying the Priviledges and Protection of it, though they are bound, even in Conscience, to submit to its Administration, as far forth as any Denison; yet do not thereby come to be Subjects or Members of that Commonwealth. Nothing can make any Man so, but his actually entering into it by positive Engagement, and express Promise and Compact. This is that, which I think, concerning the beginning of Political Societies, and that Consent which makes any one a Member of any Commonwealth.

§ 121 15-18 Dissolution of Government and state of nature, see II, § 219, note and references.

17-18 Final phrase added in 2nd edition, 1694.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Ends of Political Society and Government.

123. IF Man in the State of Nature be so free, as has been said; If he be absolute Lord of his own Person and Possessions, equal to the greatest, and subject to no Body, why will he part with his Freedom? Why will he give up this Empire, and subject himself to the Dominion and Controul of any other Power? To which 'tis obvious to Answer, that though in the state of Nature he hath such a right, yet the Enjoyment of it is very uncertain, and constantly exposed to the Invasion of others. For all being Kings as much as he, every Man his Equal, and the greater part no strict Observers of Equity and Justice, the enjoyment of the property he has in this state is very unsafe, very unsecure. This makes him willing to quit this Condition, which however free, is full of fears and continual dangers: And 'tis not without reason, that he seeks out, and is willing to joyn in Society with others who are already united, or have a mind to unite for the mutual Preservation of their Lives, Liberties and Estates, which I call by the general Name, Property.

124. The great and chief end therefore, of Mens uniting into Commonwealths, and putting themselves under Government, is § 123 Chapter ix. There is nothing in this short chapter to connect it with what goes before, or what comes after, which seems to be a continuation of the original text from § 99—see notes on II, § 95 (chapter VIII), II, § 100 and II, § 132 (chapter X). There are no references to connect it with the critique of Filmer, though some parallels (see § 124, 8-9; § 125, 1-4; § 129, 3-4) with other statements in the Second Treatise. In form it is a short restatement of his whole position, in brief paragraphs, all leading up to a judgment on James II—see § 131. It seems, therefore, like chapter xv (see note on II, § 169) to be an insertion of 1689.

2 Compare II, § 6, 2-3 and Strauss, 1953, 227.

16-17 On the extended definition of property set out here, see II, § 87, 5 note and references. The whole paragraph should be compared and contrasted with the first paragraph of Leviathan, chapter 17, and with II, § 19, 1-5 and references.

§ 124 1-3 The locus classicus for Locke's view of property in relation to government. Viner (see Introduction, 102) insists that property must here be taken to mean not simply material possessions, but property in the extended sense, the 'Lives, Liberties and Estates' of II, § 123, 15-16. In the Epistola de Tolerantia Locke puts the Preservation of their Property. To which in the state of Nature there are many things wanting.

First, There wants an establish'd, settled, known Law, received and allowed by common consent to be the Standard of Right and Wrong, and the common measure to decide all Controversies between them. For though the Law of Nature be plain and intelligible to all rational Creatures; yet Men being biassed by their Interest, as well as ignorant for want of study of it, are not apt to allow of it as a Law binding to them in the application of it to their particular Cases. 10

125. Secondly, In the State of Nature there wants a known and indifferent Judge, with Authority to determine all differences according to the established Law. For every one in that state being both Judge and Executioner of the Law of Nature, Men being partial to themselves, Passion and Revenge is very apt to carry them too far, and with too much heat, in their own Cases; as well as negligence, and unconcernedness, to make them too remiss, in other Mens.

126. Thirdly, In the state of Nature there often wants Power to back and support the Sentence when right, and to give it due Execution. They who by any Injustice offended, will seldom fail, where they are able, by force to make good their Injustice: such resistance many times makes the punishment dangerous, and frequently destructive, to those who attempt it. 5 the same point somewhat differently, with material possessions more to the forefront: 'But the pravity of mankind being such that they had rather injuriously prey upon the fruits of another mans labours (alieno labore partis frui) than take pains to provide for themselves, the necessity of preserving men in the possession of what honest industry has already acquired, and also of preserving their liberty and strength, whereby they may acquire what they further want, obliges men to enter into society one with another (ideo homini parta, ut opes et facultates; vel ea quibus parantur, ut corporis libertatem et robur, tuendi gratia, ineunda est cum aliis societas) that by mutual assistance and joint force they may secure unto each other their properties, in the things that contribute to the comfort and happiness of this life (ut mutuo auxilio et junctis viribus harum rerum ad vitam utilium sua cuique privata et secunda sit possessio)' (Klibansky and Gough, 1968, 124). Compare Macpherson, 1951, 551.

8-9 Compare II, § 12, 10-12, verbal parallel.

§ 125 1-3 Compare II, § 136, 8.

3-4 Compare II, § 7.

4-5 The mention of 'Passion' recalls Hobbes, Leviathan, chapter 17 (1904, 115, etc.), and the insistence on partiality recalls Hooker (1836, I, 305, compare II, § 91 and English Tract of 1660, 10). It is not demonstrable that Locke had either writer in mind.

127. Thus Mankind, notwithstanding all the Priviledges of the state of Nature, being but in an ill condition, while they remain in it, are quickly driven into Society. Hence it comes to pass, that we seldom find any number of Men live any time together in this 5 State. The inconveniencies, that they are therein exposed to, by the irregular and uncertain exercise of the Power every Man has of punishing the transgressions of others, make them take Sanctuary under the establish'd Laws of Government, and therein seek the preservation of their Property. 'Tis this makes them so 10 willingly give up every one his single power of punishing to be exercised by such alone as shall be appointed to it amongst them; and by such Rules as the Community, or those authorised by them to that purpose, shall agree on. And in this we have the original right and rise of both the Legislative and Executive Power, 15 as well as of the Governments and Societies themselves.

128. For in the State of Nature, to omit the liberty he has of innocent Delights, a Man has two Powers.

The first is to do whatsoever he thinks fit for the preservation of himself and others within the permission of the Law of Nature: by 5 which Law common to them all, he and all the rest of Mankind are one Community, make up one Society distinct from all other Creatures. And were it not for the corruption, and vitiousness of degenerate Men, there would be no need of any other; no necessity that Men should separate from this great and natural Community, and by 10 positive agreements combine into smaller and divided associations.

The other power a Man has in the State of Nature, is the power to punish the Crimes committed against that Law. Both these he gives up, when he joyns in a private, if I may so call it, or particular Political Society, and incorporates into any Common-15 wealth, separate from the rest of Mankind.

129. The first Power, viz. of doing whatsoever he thought fit for the Preservation of himself, and the rest of Mankind, he gives up to be regulated by Laws made by the Society, so far forth as the preservation of himself, and the rest of that Society shall require;

§ 127 10 'Single'—i.e. 'individual', not 'only'; see Kendall, 1941, 103.

§ 129 3-4 This limitation is elaborated in II, § 149, especially lines 22-5.

2, 5 Elrington, 1798, comments here that a man is bound to give up this power: he is compelled by the law of nature itself to quit the state of nature, and he can lose no liberty by it, since this would imply that civil law was distinct from natural law.

which Laws of the Society in many things confine the liberty he 5 had by the Law of Nature.

130. Secondly, the Power of punishing he wholly gives up, and engages his natural force, (which he might before imploy in the Execution of the Law of Nature, by his own single Authority, as he thought fit) to assist the Executive Power of the Society, as the Law thereof shall require. For being now in a new State, wherein 5 he is to enjoy many Conveniencies, from the labour, assistance, and society of others in the same Community, as well as protection from its whole strength; he is to part also with as much of his natural liberty in providing for himself, as the good, prosperity, and safety of the Society shall require: which is not only necessary, but 10 just; since the other Members of the Society do the like.

131. But though Men when they enter into Society, give up the Equality, Liberty, and Executive Power they had in the State of Nature, into the hands of the Society, to be so far disposed of by the Legislative, as the good of the Society shall require; yet it being only with an intention in every one the better to 5 preserve himself his Liberty and Property; (For no rational Creature can be supposed to change his condition with an intention to be worse) the power of the Society, or Legislative constituted by them, can never be suppos'd to extend farther than the common good; but is obliged to secure every ones Property by pro- 10 viding against those three defects above-mentioned, that made the State of Nature so unsafe and uneasie. And so whoever has the Legislative or Supream Power of any Common-wealth, is bound to govern by establish'd standing Laws, promulgated and known to the People, and not by Extemporary Decrees; by 15 indifferent and upright Judges, who are to decide Controversies by those Laws; And to imploy the force of the Community at home, only in the Execution of such Laws, or abroad to prevent or redress Foreign Injuries, and secure the Community from Inroads and Invasion. And all this to be directed to no other end, but the 20 Peace, Safety, and publick good of the People.

§ 131 12-21 These statements, especially lines 12-14, seem likely to be a reference to the actions of James II and the view he took of his position, for they are less appropriate than his other political judgments to the actions of Charles II. This may mark this paragraph, and indeed the whole chapter, as an insertion of 1689; see note on II, § 123, chapter IX, and compare Abrams' note on English Tract of 1660, p. 19.
