

Education has several characteristics. First, it is an all life process. Education takes place formally, informally and non-formally. Formal education happens in the learning institutions. Informal education is obtained through life experiences while non-formal education is acquired through planned activities such as sports training. Education starts at birth and it does not end. Second, education is dynamic. Education changes as the environment changes. For instance, improved technology changes the way education is administered. It changes the settings of learning institutions. For instance emergence of e-learning simplifies learning such that the students do not need to attend the classes. They learn from their locations of convenience. Education is a nurturing process. The pupils are nurtured to ensure that their latent talent is realized and utilized to the fullest. Third, it is a critical communication tool. Through education, societal culture is transmitted from one generation to the next. As a communication tool, it is used to influence the behaviors and attitudes of a people to desirable standards. it is a critical thinking tool that gives the pupils a deeper meaning of the world around them . the students utilize the knowledge and skills for personal and societal developmental purpose. The meaning of education is socially constructed. The content varies from one region to the next. However, globalization has influenced education such that some elements are universally taught. Education knowledge is imparted into the students by trained or experienced in instructors or teachers.

In conclusion, education is composed of imparting knowledge about a particular subject in a specific process. It is a critical process for self realization. it entails, imparting knowledge and skills that are essential for mental, physical and integral development for an individual, society and world. The level of knowledge imparted in the pupils depends on the age of the person. As a person grows he or she develops a deeper understanding of subjects and they are given more information regarding it. Education is a crucial instrument in the society today.
