

Balance of nature

The essay "Thinking like a mountain" by Aldo Leopold first appeared in a Sand County Almanac and sketches ^{Part of the title.} here and there in ~~the year~~ ^{Leopold} 1949 in which the author Aldo tries to bring forth the mutual harmony between animals and nature to help his readers understand the importance of staying together, depending on each other as well as appreciating one another just like a food chain in which for some given reason the prey or predator should not over run the other.

This is clearly seen when he says, "the deer herd begins to die of its own too much."

Basically, I believe that the idea the author wants his reader to understand is how we choose to live with each other and the world matters a lot as it focuses to define our tomorrow. This therefore gives me the impression that the author is very passionate about nature and humanity and therefore wants to use this essay is to inform as well as educate the public on the importance of conserving the forest as well as the environment.

The other is to ensure equal and balanced dependence in the food chain especially coming from an essay in which the writer decide to incorporate a lot of words that are not in use in ¹⁷ today's world. I as a result do agree with Leopold when it finally dawns to him that wolves are just as an important aspect of nature like the rest of the other creatures and that nature should be equally balanced to serve ~~by~~ the interests of its beings.

In a story that begins when a family of wolves has just stopped playing in the river, and without a second thought a hunter decides to shoot the wolf and injuring the young one shows that without the wolf there is a complete imbalance in the ecosystem. Therefore this essay clearly focuses to portraying a food balance in nature. It is therefore in my belief that this essay is not only out to bring a food chain balance between animal and nature but also between man, animal and nature.

This should be part of your summary.

When the writer through his essay, goes ahead and says, "We all strive for safety, prosperity, comfort, long life, and dullness. The deer strives with his supple legs, the cowman with trap and poison, the statesman with pen, the most of us with machines, votes, and dollars, but it'll come to the same thing: peace in our time. A measure of success in this is all well enough, and perhaps is a requisite to objective thinking, but too much. Safety seems to yield only danger in the long run." ^(Leopold pg) I am more than convinced that the writer Aldo is talking about a food chain balanced ^{that strikes a} ~~strike~~ in nature and man.

In addition to that, Leopold's essays also tries to focus on animal rights and the need to extend ethics as well as understanding the ways of nature with regards to basic ecology and the true meaning of living ultimately on land within the animal rights movement and further discussion on environmental ethics that clearly illustrates just how alienated from nature humans have become and this is further seen through the process or death (Ahlers, 1990).

In my own point of view, I think the writer, Aldo was in so much pain as he seriously care about the loss of the wilderness and the mistreatment of wild animals at the expense of the growth and development of nature and the environment. In addition to that, the essay "Thinking like a mountain" also works to clearly bring forth the works of Leopold while he was working as a forester in the southwestern United States where he was able to witness the old wolves and pups crossing the river below the canyon that he and the other foresters were on which were fearlessly struggling for a kill. The result led Leopold to show enormous concern for these animals as well as nature, which greatly reflected on the environmental values such as care and understanding. It is for these reasons that I think as well as believe that the writer's idea was very well created and in order since it tries so hard to make man understand and incorporate the idea of caring for the environment.

Moreover, Aldo's ability to rethink on the importance of predators in the balance of nature that brought back the bears and mountain lions, served as an eye opener to lead me to my choice of agreeing with Aldo since both our ideas work to protect and conserve the environment and nature. This I believe is the connection that we both share. ✓

Furthermore, I believe that the writer's idea to conserve the environment as well as wild animals clearly works best to preserve young and immature animals that are very fragile and vulnerable to stand and support them. This I also believe works to build and grow the tourism sector that will further help to act as a tourism attraction center leading to a growth in the market industry hence the international market will be improved and enhanced to facilitate and serve the growing market environs.

Through the challenge and courage that the author envisions clearly states that it is the responsibility of any sound minded persons in the society to care for animals as well as the environment to ensure a more balanced environmental state that is interesting and full of life. For this will ensure more comfortable surroundings. And just as the writer points out, that an individual's moral values like love and trust are the key additional advantage to caring for the environment and its species in a free and exciting manner leading to a more mutual relationship between the two.

KD, we first of all need a clear summary of Leopold's text. We don't have here a coherent representation of his ideas.

Second, you have not properly cited your sources here. It is not enough to simply list a source in the Works Cited; we need to know where the information from that text is used in your text. Otherwise you are "stealing" those ideas and presenting them as your own, which is plagiarism, hence the D. I think you have a good idea here about the balance of "man, animal and
