

Over the years, Glenn Prickett explains, NGOs like Conservation International, The Nature Conservancy, and the World Wildlife Fund have developed tools and large-scale education campaigns that can help the rural poor live more sustainably and preserve the very natural systems on which they depend. "But we have not yet developed the tools and scale of operation to meet the globalization threat to biodiversity, which is becoming overwhelming," he explained.

Copyrighted material