
When America Relaxes, “Food Police” Should Keep Quiet

Paul King

Paul King is senior editor of Nation's Restaurant News, in which this article was first published in the August 25, 2003, issue.

CONNECTING TO THE TOPIC

Americans love fast food. But if we try to blame the fast-food industry for America's obesity problem, could we end up with “banned” foods? Could fast-food companies deem some foods just too high a liability? What could happen to our freedom of choice? Could the “food police” ruin fast food?