I am a student at Purdue University and not yet made a choice on my major of study but I want to major in Supply Management. I have had a fascination in this field of study for a while now. I developed this interest during my high school studies. Thereon I have had a thing for the business studies field of study. I was born and brought up in China. I then went to a neighboring pre-school for my early education. The main language that was in use during that time was Chinese. In the field of business, I came to realize how knowledge of the English language was a great asset. This would allow me to grow in the business field even outside my mother country, China.

At the age of ten, I begun to study English to be able to communicate with the people I interacted from all other parts of the world. I found the whole process of learning the new language to be challenging and demanding. I had to put in more and more commitment and time to be able to grasp the basics of the language. In the process of studying the new language, I developed an interest in writing articles. This would later merge with my interest in the business field to compel me to writing journals and articles relating to business activities.

High school American English teacher helped with confidence -
I later decided to further my higher education in the USA where some of my friends and relatives were already based. This migration gave me the push to venture more into writing in the English language both as a hobby and as area of interest and as an effort to fit in the new environment I was getting into. I came to meet my friends from back home who had it all in the English language. This gave me the motivation to put more effort in getting the language right.

The fact that my friends got it made me believe in myself even more. Therefore, my family and friends played a major role in giving me motivation to keep writing and achieve something out of
