The footstool essay is the 5 paragraph structured essay that we grew up in middle school and high school. The essay is structured in a introduction paragraph following with 3 bodies and a conclusion. The problem with this type of essay is that this type of essay has no depth. In the body paragraphs the structural essay is labeled with a topic, concrete detail, example, and analysis. Problem with this is that this structural essay has weak creativity and specific details can be missed. There are so much to writing that a shallow analysis that usually consists of 2-3 sentences.
