

PHE 500 Final Project Milestone Three Guidelines and Rubric

Overview: For this submission, due in Module Seven, you will submit your program or intervention analysis. In this submission, you should identify a local, national or international program or intervention that addresses your selected issue and assess its impact on the issue at the respective level (local, national or international impact). You should identify any contributions that have been made by public health agencies, positions, or roles with regard to your selected issue and discuss the impact that each had on program or intervention outcomes. Then, evaluate the success of the selected program or intervention, giving justification for your evaluation. Identify the social and behavioral factors that the program or intervention addressed, and evaluate whether or not addressing these factors contributed to the success of the program or intervention, making sure to justify your reasoning. Similarly, identify the determinants of health that this program or intervention addressed and evaluate whether or not addressing the determinants contributed to the success of the program or intervention, making sure to justify your reasoning. Analyze the program or intervention's use of public health principles and theories to promote behavior change. What principles and theories were used? How did the use of these principles and theories promote behavior change? Discuss and analyze any challenges that you feel the program or intervention may have faced. If you feel that no challenges were encountered, what do you think were some challenges that the program or intervention could have faced? Finally, explain how you feel the program or intervention could have been improved, making sure to apply basic public health principles or theories discussed in the course, and taking care to support your claims.

Specifically, the following critical elements must be addressed:

I. Program or Intervention Analysis

- A. Identify a local, national, or international program or intervention that addresses your issue and assess the impact of the program or intervention on the issue at that level.
- B. What contributions have been made by public health agencies, positions, or roles with regard to this program or intervention, and how did their contributions impact outcomes?
- C. Evaluate the success of the selected program or intervention (whether it was successful or not). Be sure to justify your evaluation.
- D. What social and behavioral factors did this program or intervention address, and did addressing these factors contribute to the success of the program or intervention? Why or why not?
- E. What determinants of health did this program or intervention address, and did addressing these issues contribute to the success of the program or intervention? Why or why not?
- F. Analyze the program or intervention's use of public health principles and theories to promote behavior change.
- G. Discuss the challenges that this program or intervention may have faced. If you feel that it has not faced any challenges, what do you feel are some potential challenges that it could have faced? Be sure to justify your reasoning.
- H. Explain how you feel this program or intervention could have been improved by applying basic public health principles or theories discussed in the course. Be sure to support your claims.

Guidelines for Submission: Milestone Three should follow these formatting guidelines: 2–4 pages in length, double spaced, 12-point Times New Roman font, one-inch margins, and citations in APA style. Once you have submitted this milestone to Blackboard for grading, post it to the Milestone Three Review discussion board for your peers to review in the next module.
